'Twixt heav'n and earth. Donne.

To the shame of slow endeavouring art

Thy easy numbers slow. Milton.

This day's death denounc'd, if aught I see,

Will prove no sudden but a slow-pac'd evil,

A long day's dying to augment our pain. Milton.

For eight slow-circling years by tempests tost.

Pope.

Some demon urg'd

T' explore the fraud with guile oppos'd to guile,

Slow-pacing thrice around th' insidious pile. Pope.

To Slow. v. a. [from the adjective.] To omit by dilatoriness; to delay; to procrastinate. Not in use. The true word was for slow.

Now do you know the reason of this haste?
—I would I knew not why it should be slow'd.
Shakespeare.

SLOWLY. adv. [from slow.]

1. Not speedily; not with celerity; not with velocity.

The pious young bears her gifts away,
Spreads his black wings, and slowly mounts to day,
Pope.

2. Not soon; not early; not in a little time.

The poor remnant of human seed peopled their country slowly, by little and little, Bacon.

Our fathers bent their painful industry
To check a monarchy that slowly grew;
But did not France or Holland's fate foresee, Whole a long power to swift dominion flew. Dryd.

We oft our slowly growing works impart,

Medici may be extinct before their burial place is finished. Addison on Italy.

SLOWNESS. n. f. [from slow.]

1. Smallness of motion; not speed; want of velocity; absence of celerity or swiftness.

Providence hath confined these human hearts, that what invention hath in the strength of its motion, is a step to the slowness of it: and what it hath in the extraordinary quickness of its motion, must be allowed to be in the great strength that is required unto it. Witt's Mathemat. Magic.

Motion is the absolute mode of a body, but swiftness or slowness are relative ideas. Watts.

2. Length of time in which any thing acts or is brought to pass; not quickness.

Tyrants are what are they can to increase the slowness of death. Waller.

3. Dulness to admit conviction or affection.

5. Deliberation; cool delay.

6. Dilatoriness; procrastination.

SLOWWORM. n. f. [slapworm, Saxon.]

The blind worm; a large viper, not mortal, scarcely venomous.

Though we have found it mud snakes in the belly of the cucurbit, or slowworm, yet may the viper emphatically bear the name.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To SLUBBER. v. a. [probably from lubber.]

1. To do any thing lazily, imperfectly, or with idle hurry.

Nature shewed the count not like men who slub- ber up matters of mean account. Sidney.

Bassanio told him, he would make some speech
Of his return: he answer'd, do not so,
Slubber not business for my sake.

Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

As they are slubbered over, the malignity that remains will show itself in some chronick disease.

Witsman's Surgery.

To stain; to daub. [This seems to be from slobber, slubber, or slaver.]

You must be content to slubber the gloss of your new fortunes with this more stubborn and boisterous expedition. Shakespeare.

3. To cover coarsely or carelessly. This is now not in use, otherwise than as a low colloquial word.

A man of secret ambitious end, and proportionate counsels, smothered under the habit of a scholar, and slubbered over with a certain rude and clownish fashion, that had the semblance of integrity.

Wotton.

SLUBBERDEGULLION. n. f. [I suppose a cant word without derivation.] A paltry, dirty, sorry wretch.

Quoth she, although thou hast desert'd,
Bale slubberdegullion, to be serv'd
As thou didst vow to deal with me,
If thou hadst got the story. Hudibras.

SLUDGE. n. f. [I suppose from plug, slough, Saxon.] Mire; dirt mixed with water.

The earth I made a mere soft sludge or mud.

Milton.

1. An idler; a drone; a slow, heavy, sleepy, lazy wretch.

Fit what a slug is Hastings, that he comes not! Shakespeare.

2. An hindrance; an obstruction.

Uttery dulls and damps all improvements, wherein money would be stirring, if it were not for the slug. Bacon.

3. A kind of slow creeping snail.

4. [plug, an hammerhead, Saxon.] A cylindrical or oval piece of metal shot from a gun.

When fractures are made with bullets or slugs, there the scalp and cranium are driven in together. Witsman's Surgery.

A, forc'd from wind-guns, lead itself can fly,
And pond'rous slugs cut swiftly through the sky.

Pope.

To SLUG. v. n. [from the noun.] To lie idle; to play the drone; to move slowly.

All he did to us was good knights,
And draw them from pursuit of praise and fame,
To slug in such and sensual delights,
And end their days with unrenowned shame.

Fanny Queen.

He lay not all night slugging in a cabin under his mantle, but us'd commonly to keep others waking to defend their lives. Spenser.

One went slugging on with a thousand cares.

L'Estrange.

SLUGGARD. n. f. [from slug.] An idler; a drone; an inactive lazy fellow.

Civ meicy, lords, and witchful gentlemen,
That you have taken a tardy sluggard here.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

This mightier sound shall make
The dead to rise,
And open tombs and open eyes,

To the long sluggards of five thousand years. Cowley.

Up, up, says Avarice; thou snor'st again,
Stretchest thy limbs, and yawn'st; but all in vain:
The sweetest Lore no denial takes;
At his command th' unwilling sluggard wakes.

Splightly May commands our youth to keep The vigils of net night, and breaks their sluggard sleep. Dryden.

To SLUGGARDIZE. v. a. [from sluggard.]

To make idle; to make drowsy.

Rather see the wonders of the world abroad,
Than, living dully sluggardiz'd at home,
Wear out thy youth with shapeless idleness.

Shakespeare.

SLUGGISH. adj. [from slug.] Dull; drowsy; lazy; slothful; idle; insipid; slow; inactive; inert.

Sluggish idleness, the nurse of sin,
Upon a slothful ass he chose to ride. Fairy Queen.

The dull billows, thick as troubled mire,
Whom neither wind out of their feat could force,
Nor tides did drive out of their sluggish source.

Spenser.

One, bolder than the rest,
With his broad sword provok'd the sluggish beast.

Waller.

Matter, being impotent, sluggish, and inactive, hath no power to stir or move itself. Husward.

SLUGGISHLY. adv. [from sluggish.] Dully; not nimbly; lazily; idly; slowly.

SLUGGISHNESS. n. f. [from sluggish.]

Dulness; sloth; laziness; idleness; in-ertness.

The most of mankind are inclined by her thither, if they would take the pains, no less than birds to fly, and horses to run: which if they lose, it is through their own sluggishness, and by that means become her prodigies, not her children.

Ben Jonson.

It is of great moment to teach the mind to shake off its sluggishness, and vigorously employ itself about what season shall direct. Locke.

SLUICE. n. f. [sluyse, Dutch; escluse, Fr.]

slusa, Italian.] A watergate; a flood-gate; a vent for water.

Two other precious drops, that ready flood
Each in their crystal sluice, he, ere they fell,
Kiss'd, as the gracious signs of sweet remorse,
And pious awe, that fear'd to have offended. Miln.

Divine Alphons, who, by secret sluice,
Stole under seas to meet his Arethuse. Milton.

If we receive them all, they were more than seven; it only the natural sluices, they were fewer.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

As waters from her sluice, flow'd Unbounded sorrow from her eyes. Prior.

Each sluice of affluent fortune open'd soon,
And wealth flow'd in at morning, night, and noon.

To SLUICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To emit by floodgates.

Like a traitor coward,
Sluic'd out his innocent soul through streams of blood. Shakespeare.

Veins of liquid ore sluic'd from the lake. Miln.

You wrong me, if you think I'll sell one drop Within these veins for pageants; but let honour
Call for my blood, I'll sluice it into streams;

Turn fortune loose again to my pursuit,
And let me hum her through embattled foes,
In dusty plains; there will I be the first.

Dryden's Spanish Friar.

SLUICY. adj. [from sluice.] Falling in streams as from a sluice or floodgate.

And oft whole sheets descend of sluicy rain;
Suck'd by the spongy clouds from off the main:
The lofty skies at once come pouring down,
The promis'd crop and golden labours down.

To SLUMBER. v. n. [slumenan, Saxon; sluymeren, Dutch.]

1. To sleep lightly; to be not awake, nor in profound sleep.

He that keepeth Isaci shall neither slumber nor sleep. Psalms.

Conscience wakes despair that slumber'd. Miln.

2. To sleep; to repose. Sleep and slum- ber are often confounded.

God speaketh, yet man perceiveth it not: in a dream, in a vision of the night, when deep sleep falleth upon men, in slumberings upon the bed.

Job, xxxiii. 15.

Have ye chosen this place,
After the toil of battle, to repose
Your wearied virtue, for the use you find
To slumber here? Milton.

3. To be in a state of negligence and supineness.

Why slumbers Pope, who leads the tuneful train,
Nor hears that virtue which he loves complain?
Young.

TO SLUMBER. v. a.

1. To lay to sleep.
2. To stupify; to stun.

'Then up he took the slumber'd senseless corse,
And, ere he could out of his swoon awake,
Him to his castle brought. Fanny Queen.
To honest a deed after it was done, or to slumber his conscience in the doing, he studied other incentives. Weston.

SLUMBER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Light sleep; sleep not profound.

And for his dreams, I wonder he's so fond
To trust the mock'ry of unquiet slumbers.
Shakespeare's Richard III.

From carelessness it shall fall into slumber, and from a slumber it shall settle into a deep and long sleep; till at last, perhaps, it shall sleep itself into a lethargy, and that such an one, that nothing but hell and judgment shall awaken it. South.
Labour and rest, that equal periods keep;
Obedient slumbers that can wake and weep. Pope.

2. Sleep; repose.

Boy! Lucius! fast asleep? It is no matter;
Enjoy the honey-heavy dew of slumber.
Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
Ev'n lust and envy sleep, but love denies Rest to my soul, and slumber to my eyes:
Three days I promis'd to attend my doom,
And two long days and nights are yet to come.
Dryden.

SLUMBEROUS. } adj. [from slumber.] SLUMBERY.

1. Inviting to sleep; soporiferous; causing sleep.

The timely dew of sleep,
Now falling with soft slumberous weight, inclines
Our eyelids. Milton.
While pensive in the silent slumberous shade,
Sleep's gentle pow'rs her drooping eyes invade;
Minerva, life-like, on embodied air
Imparts the form of Iphthima. Pope's Odyssey.
There every eyewith slumberous chains she bound,
And dash'd the flowing goblets to the ground.

2. Sleepy; not waking.

A great perturbation in nature! to receive at once the benefit of sleep, and do the effects of watching: in this slumb'ry agitation, what have you heard her say? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

SLUNE. The preterite and participle passive of sling.

SLUNK. The preterite and participle passive of slink.

Silence accompany'd; for beast, and bird,
They to their grassy couch, these to their nests,
Were slunk. Milton's Paradise Lost.

TO SLUR. v. a. [floorig, Dutch, nasty; floore, a slut.]

1. To sully; to soil; to contaminate.
2. To pass lightly; to balk; to misf.

The atheists laugh in their sleeves, and not a little triumph, to see the cause of theism thus betrayed by its professed friends, and the grand argument slurred by them, and to their work done to their hands. Cudworth.

Studious to please the genius of the times,
With periods, points, and tropes, he slurs his crimes;
He robb'd not, but he borrow'd from the poor,
And took but with intention to restore. Dryden.

3. To cheat; to trick.

What was the publick faith found out for,
But to slur men of what they fought for. Hudib.
Come, seven's the main,
Cries Ganymede; the usual trick:
Seven, slur a six, eleven, a nick. Prior.

SLUR. n. f. [from the verb.] Faint reproach; slight disgrace.

Here is an ape made a king for shewing tricks;
and the fox is then to put a slur upon him, in exposing him for sport to the scorn of the people.
J. Esrange.

No one can rely upon such an one, either with safety to his affairs, or without a slur to his reputation; since he that trusts a knave has no other recompence but to be accounted a fool for his pains.
South's Sermons.

SLUT. n. f. [sladde, Dutch.]

1. A dirty woman.

Cricket, to Windsor chimnies shalt thou leap:
Where fires thou find'st unrak'd, and hearths unswept,
There pinch the maids as blue as bilberry;
Our radiant queen hates sluts and slutt'ry. Shak.
The veal's all tags; the butter's turn'd to oil;
And thus I buy good meat for sluts to spoil. King.

2. A word of slight contempt to a woman.

Hold up, you sluts,
Your aprons mountant; you're not oathable,
Although I know you'll swear. Shaksp. Timon.
The frogs were ready to leap out of their skins for joy, till one crafty old slut in the company advised them to consider a little better on't. J. Esfr.

SLUTT'RY. n. f. [from slut.] The qualities or practice of a slut.

Slutt'ry, to such neat excellence oppos'd,
Should make desire vomit emptiness. Shak. Cymb.
These make our girls their slutt'ry rue,
By pinching them both black and blue;
And put a penny in their shoe,
The house for cleanly sweeping. Drayton.
A man gave money for a black, upon an opinion that his swarthy colour was rather slutt'ry than nature, and the fault of his master that kept him no cleaner. J. Esrange.

SLUTTISH. adj. [from slut.]

1. Nasty; not nice; not cleanly; dirty; indecently negligent of cleanliness.

All preparations both for food and lodging, such as would make one detest niggardness, it is to sluttish a vice. Sidney.
Albeit the mainers do covet store of cabins, yet indeed they are but sluttish dens that breed sickness in peace, serving to cover stealth, and in fight are dangerous to tear men with their splinters. Ratib's Piffsy.

The nastiness of that nation, and sluttish course of life, hath much promoted the opinion, occasioned by their servile condition at first, and inferior ways of parsimony ever since. Brown.

Stomach disorder fill'd his stable,
And sluttish plenty deck'd her table. Prior.

2. It is used sometimes for meretritions.

She got a legacy by sluttish tricks. Huday.

SLUTTISHNESS. n. f. [from sluttish.] The qualities or practice of a slut; nastiness; dirtiness.

That is only suitable in laying a foul complexion upon a filthy favour, setting forth both in sluttishness. Sidney.

I look on the instinct of this noisome and troublesome creature, the loose, of searching out foul and nasty clothes to harbour and breed in, as an effect of divine providence, designed to deter men and women from sluttishness and foridness, and to provoke them to cleanliness and neatness.
Ray on the Creation.

SLY. adj. [rlic, Saxon, slippery, and me- taphorically deceitful; slager, Island ick.] Meanly artful; secretly insidious; cunning.

For my fly wiles and subtle craftiness,
The title of the kingdom I possess. H. Bp. Tale.
And for I doubt the Greekish monarch fly,
Will use with him some of his wanted craft.
Forfax.

His proud step he scornful turn'd,
And with fly circumspection. Milton's Par. Lost.
Envy is a curled plant; some fibres of it are rooted almost in every man's nature, and it works in a fly and imperceptible manner. Watts.
It is odious in a man to look fly and leering at a woman. Clariff.

SLYLY. adv. [from fly.] With a secret artifice; insidiously.

TO SMACK. v. n. [smæckan, Sax. smacken, Dutch.]

1. To have a taste; to be tinged with any particular taste.

2. To have a tincture or quality infused.
All (fly, all ages, smack of this vice, and he
To die for it! Shakspere's Measure for Measure.
He is but a ballad to the time,
That doth not smack of observation. Sb. K. John.

3. To make a noise by separation of the lips strongly pressed together, as after a taste.

She kiss'd with smacking lip the smothering lout;
For such a kiss demands a pair of gloves. Gay.

4. To kiss with a close compression of the lips, so as to be heard when they separate.

He gives a smacking buss. Pope.

TO SMACK. v. a.

1. To kiss.

So careless flow'rs, strow'd on the water's face,
The curled whirlpools suck, smack, and embrace,
Yet drown them. Doune.

2. To make to emit any quick smart noise.

More than one steed must Delia's empire feel,
Who sits triumphant o'er the flying wheel;
And, as the guides it through the admiring throng,
With what an air the smacks the silken thong!

SMACK. n. f. [smæck, Dutch; from the verb.]

1. Taste; flavour.
2. Tincture; quality from something mixed.

The child, that sucketh the milk of the nurse, learns his first speech of her, the which, being the first inured to his tongue, is ever after most pleasing unto him; moreover, that though he afterwards be taught English, yet the smack of the first will always abide with him. Spenser.

Your lordship, though not clean past your youth, hath yet some smack of age in you, some relish of the fatness of time, and have a care of your health.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.

It caused the neighbours to rue, that a pretty smack only of puerility opened a gap to the oppression of the whole. Corrue.

As the Pythagorean soul
Runs through all beasts, and fish, and fowl,
And has a smack of every one,
So love does, and has ever done. Hudibras.

3. A pleasing taste.

Smack pease upon hovel;
To cover it quickly let owner regard,
Lest dove and the cadow there finding a smack,
With ill stormy weather do perish thy flock. Tuff.

4. A small quantity; a taste.

Trembling to approach
The little barrel, which he fear to brach,
He essays the wimbles, often draws it back,
And deals to thirsty servants but a smack.
Dryden's Persius.

5. The act of parting the lips audibly, as after a pleasing taste.

6. A loud kiss.
He took
The bride about the neck, and kiss'd her lips
With such a clamorous smack, that at the parting
All the church echo'd. Shak. Tans. of the Shrove.

I saw the lecherous citizen turn back
His head, and on his wife's lip steal a smuck.

Donne.

7. [ynacca, Saxon; smucka, Islandick.] A small ship.

SMALL. adj. [small, Sax. smal, Dutch; smaar, Islandick.]

1. Little in quantity; not great.

I in a brief moment have I forsaken thee, but with great necessity will I gather thee. Isa. liv. 7.
Dea h'ov' this restless truth unfolds,
The in-g'ny, 't'ral how small a body holds.

Dryden's Juvenal.

All numeration is but still the adding of one unit more, and giving to the whole together a distinct name, whereby to distinguish it from every smaller or greater multitude of units. Locke.

The ordinary smallest measure we have is looked on as an unit in number. Locke.

The danger is less when the quantity of the fluid is too small, than when it is too great; for a smaller quantity will pass where a larger cannot, but not contrariwise. Arbutnot.

Good cooks cannot abide fiddling work: such is the dressing of small birds, requiring a world of cookery. Swift.

2. Slender; exile; minute.

After the earthquake a fire, and after the fire—
A small voice. 1 Kings, xix. 12.

Your sin and calf I burnt, and ground it very small, till it was as small as dust. Deut. ix. 21.

Those wavy'd then limber fans
For wings, and smallest lineaments exact. Milton.
Small-grained land is esteemed the best for the tenant, and the large for the landlord and lord.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. Little in degree.

There arose no small air about that way.

Narrow man being fill'd with little shares,
Courts, city, church, are all shops of small wares;
All having blown to sparks their noble fire,
And drawn their found gold ingot into wire.

Donne.

Some men's behaviour is like a verse, wherein every syllable is measured: how can a man comprehend great matters that breaketh his mind too much to small observations? Bacon.

Knowing, by fame, small poets, small musicians,
Small painters, and still smaller politicians. Harte.
Small is the subject, but not so the praise. Pope.

5. Little in the principal quality; not strong; weak: as, small beer.

Go down to the cellar to draw ale or small beer.
Swift.

SMALL. v. f. [from the adjective.] The small or narrow part of any thing. It is particularly applied to the part of the leg below the calf.

Her garment was cut after such a fashion, that though the length of it reached to the ankles, yet in her going one might sometimes discern the small of her leg. Sidney.

Into her legs I'd have love's issues fall,
And all her calls into a gouty small. Swick.

His excellency having mounted on the small of my leg, advanced forwards. Gulliver's Travels.

SMALLAGE. n. f. [from small age, because it soon withers. kinner. Elosalixion, Lat.]
A plant. It is a species of parsley, and a common weed by the sides of ditches and brooks. Miller.

Smallage is raised by sowing seed, which is reddish, and pretty big, of a roundish oval figure, a little more full and rising on one side than the other, and streaked from one end to the other.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

SMALLCOAL. n. f. [small and coal.] Little wood coals used to light fires.

A smallcoal man, by waking one of these distressed gentlemen, saved him from ten years imprisonment. Spektor.

When smallcoal murmurs in the hoarser throat,
From smutty dangers guard thy threaten'd coast.

Gay.

SMALLCRAFT. n. f. [small and craft.]
A little vessel below the denomination of a ship.

Shall he before me sign, whom t'other day
A smallcraft vessel hither did convey;

Where stain'd with prunes and rotten figs he lay?
Dryden.

SMALLPOX. n. f. [small and pox.] An eruptive distemper of great malignity:

variole.
He fell sick of the smallpox. W's-man.

SMALLY. adv. [from small.] In a little quantity; with minuteness; in a little or low degree.

A child that is still, and somewhat hard of wit, is never chosen by the father to be made a scholar, or else, when he cometh to the school, is smally tegarded. Astham.

SMALLNESS. n. f. [from small.]

1. Littleness; not greatness.

The parts in glass are evenly spread, but are not so close as in gold; as we see by the easy admission of light, and by the smallness of the weight.

Bacon's Natural History.

2. Littleness; want of bulk; minuteness;
exility.

Whatever is invisible, in respect of the fineness of the body, or the smallness of the parts, or subtilty of the motion, is little enquired. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The smallness of the rays of light may contribute very much to the power of the agent by which they are refracted. Newton's Opticks.

3. Want of strength; weakness.

SMALT. n. f. A beautiful blue substance, produced from two parts of zaffre being fused with three parts common salt, and one part potash. Hill or Fossils.

Made of smaragd; resembling emerald.

SMART. n. f. [smert, Saxon; smert, Dutch; smarta, Swedish.]

1. Quick, pungent, lively pain.

Then her mind, though too late, by the smart, was brought to think of the disease. Sidney.

2. Pain, corporal or intellectual.

Mishaps are water'd by advice discreet,
And counsel mitigates the greatest smart.

Fairly Queen.

It increased the smart of his present sufferings, to compare them with his former happiness.

Asterbury.

TO SMART. v. n. [smertan, Sax. smerten, Dutch.]

1. To feel quick lively pain.

When a man's wounds cease to smart, only because he has lost his feeling, they are nevertheless mortal. South.

Human blood, when first let, is mild, and will not make the eye, or a fresh wound, smart.

Arbutnot.

2. To feel pain of body or mind.

He that is surety for a stranger shall smart for
it. Prov.

No creature smarts so little as a fool.
Let peals of laughter, Codrus! round thee break,
Then unconcern'd canst hear the mighty crack.

Pope.

SMART. adj. [from the noun.]

1. Pungent; sharp; causing smart.

How smart a lash that speech doth give my conscience! Shakespeare.

6

To the fair he fair would quarter show,
His tender heart recoils at every blow;
If unawares he gives too smart a stroke,
He means but to correct, and not provoke. Grave.

2. Quick; vigorous; active.

That day was spent in smart skirmishes, in which many fell. Clarendon.

This sound proceeded from the nimble and smart percussions of the ambient air, made by the swift and irregular motions of the particles of the liquors. Boyle.

3. Producing any effect with force and vigour.

After show'rs
The stars shine smarter, and the moon adorns,
As with unborrow'd beams her sharpen'd horns.

Dryden.

4. Acute; witty.

It was a smart reply that Augustus made to one that ministered this comfort of the fatality of things: this was so far from giving any ease to his mind, that it was the very thing that troubled him. Tulley.

5. Brisk; vivacious; lively.

You may see a smart rhetorician turning his hat in his hands, during the whole course of his harangue. A deaf man would think he was the opening a beaver. Madison.

Who, for the poor renown of being smart,
Would leave a sting within a brother's heart?

Young.

SMART. n. f. A fellow affecting briskness and vivacity. A cant word.

SMARTLY. adv. [from smart.] After a smart manner; sharply; briskly; vigorously; wittily.

ings which relate to the law. Madison.

He is a smart fellow, and great in those proceedings which relate to the law. Madison.

SMARTNESS. n. f. [from smart.]

1. The quality of being smart; quickness; vigour.

What interest hath a smartness in sinking the air that is the production of a new phrase, measure, or figure of speech, which is a char of a smart or other word, which is a no sound, if they do but fly away through the air; whereas, if the one or the other strike the ear, and the other or the one out of a smart, the ear of their percussions on the air put it into a smart vibrating motion, which, reaching the ear, produces an audible noise. Boyle.

2. Liveliness; briskness; wittiness.

I met all the clubs to smart a new phrase, equal in wit, humour, smartness, pertness, to my set. Swift.

SMATCH. n. f. [corrupted from smack.]

1. Taste; tincture; twang.

Thou art a fellow of a good respect;
Thy life hath had some smatch of honour in't.

Shakespeare.

Some nations have a peculiar guttural or nasal
smatch in their language. Holder's Elem. of Speech.

These salts have somewhat of a nitrous taste,
but mix with a smatch of a vitriolick. Grave.

TO SMARTTER. v. n. [It is supposed to be corrupted from smack or taste.]

1. To have a slight taste; to have a slight, superficial, and imperfect knowledge.

Such a practice gives a slight smartter of several sciences, without any kind knowledge. Watts.

Since, by a little smartter in learning, and great conceit of himself, he has lost his religion, may he find it again by harder study and an humbler mind. Bentley.

2. To talk superficially or ignorantly.

In proper terms, such as men smartter.
When they throw out and mis the matter. Hudib.

Of state affairs you cannot smartter;
Are awkward when you try to flatter. Swift.

SMARTTER.

SMATTER n. s. [from the verb.] Superficial or slight knowledge.

All other sciences were extinguished during this empire, excepting only a smatter of judicial astrology.

SMATTERER n. s. [from smatter.] One who has a slight or superficial knowledge.

Those few who preserve any rudiments of learning, are, except one or two smatterers, the clergy's friends.

TO SMEAR v. a. [ymean, Saxon; smearan, Dutch.]

1. To overspread with something viscous and adhesive; to besmear.

If any such be here, that love this painting,
Wherein you see me smear'd,
If any think brave death outweighs bad life,
Let him wave thus.

Then from the mountain leaping timber tall,
Began to build a veil of hued bark,
Smear'd round with pitch.

Smear'd as this was with black Gorgonian blood,
The Lure spring above the Stygian flood.

2. To soil; to contaminate.

Why had I not, with charitable hand,
Took up a bigger's filth at my gate?
Who smear'd this, and mix'd with infamy,
I might have found no part of it is mine.

SMEAR n. s. [from the verb.] An ointment; any fat liquor or juice.

SMEARY adj. [from smear] Dawby; adhesive.

A smear foam works o'er my grinding jaws,
And utmost anguish shakes my lab'ring frame.

SNEATH n. s. A sea fowl.

TO SNEETH or SMUTCH v. a. [ymæðe, Saxon.] To smoke; to blacken with smoke. Not in use.

SMIGMATICK adj. [σμιγμα.] Soapy; derivative.

TO SMELL v. a. preterite and part. smelt. [Of this word the etymology is very obscure. Skinner, the most acute of all etymologists, derives it from smool, warm, Dutch; because smells are increased by heat.]

1. To perceive by the nose.
Their neighbours hear the same music, or smell the fair perfumes, with themselves: for here is enough.

2. To find out by mental sagacity.
The horse smelt him out, and presently a crutch came in his heel how to countermine him.

TO SMELL v. i.

1. To strike throstrills.
The king is but a man as I am: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditio.

The daintiest smells of flowers are out of those plants whose leaves smell not.

2. To have any particular scent: with of.
Honey in Spain smells apparently of the rosemary or orange, from whence the bee gathereth it.

upon one leg, and should smell of oil if duly handled.

If you have a silver tycapan, and the butter
smells of smock, lay the salt upon the coals.

3. To have a particular tincture or smack of any quality.

My unfold'd tongue, the atterness of my life,
Will to your accusation overweigh,
That you shall stifle in your va report,
And smell of calumny.

A man to smelling of the people's lot,
The court receiv'd him first for charity.

TO PRACTISE the act of smelling.

Whoever shall make like unto that, to smell thereto, shall be cut off.

I had a mind to know, whether they would find out the treasure, and whether smelling enabled them to know what is good for their nourishment.

5. To exercise sagacity.

Down with the nose, take the bridge quite away,
Of him that, his particular to foretell,
Smells from the general weal.

SMELL n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Power of smelling; the sense of which the nose is the organ.

Next, in the nostrils she doth use the smell,
As God the breath of life in them did give;
So makes he now this pow'r in them to dwell,
To judge all airs whereby we breathe and live.

2. Scent; power of affecting the nose.

The sweetest smell in the air is the white double violet, which comes twice a year.
All sweet smells have joined with them for easly or crude odours.

Pleasant smells are not confined unto vegetables, but found in divers animals.

There is a great variety of smells, though we have but a few names for them: the smell of a violet and of musk, both sweet, are as distinct as any two smells.

SMELLER n. s. [from smell.] He who smells.

SMELLFEAST n. s. [smell and feast.] A parasite; one who haunts good tables.

TO SMELT v. a. [smalta, Islandick; smelten, Dutch.] To melt ore, so as to extract the metal.

A sort of earth, of a dusky red colour, found chiefly in iron mines. Some of this earth contains as much iron as to render it worth smelting.

SMELTFR n. s. [from smelt.] One who melts ore.

The smelters come up to the assayers.

TO SMERK v. r. [ymencian, Saxon.] To smile wantonly.

Certain gentlemen of the gown, whose awkward, spruce, prim, sneering, and smirking countenances have got good preferment by force of cringing.

SMERKY or SMIRK adj. Nice; smart; jaunty.

See how bragg yon bullock bears,
So smirk, so smooth, his prick'd ears?
His horns been as brack as rainbow bent,
His dew-lap as lily as last of Kent.

SMEALIN n. s. [cobitis aculeata.] A fish.

SMICKET n. s. [diminutive of smock; smocket, smicket.] The under-garment of a woman.

TO SMIGHT, for smite.
As when a griffin, seiz'd of his prey,
A dragon fierce encounter'd in his sight,
Through widest air making his idle way,

That would his rightful ravine rend away.
With hideous horror both together smight.
And fouse so sore that they the heavens ally.

TO SMILE v. n. [smighen, Dutch.]

1. To contract the face with pleasure; to express kindness, love, or gladness, by the countenance; contrary to frown.

votaries, and cheered them in their passage to her palace.

The smiling infant in his hand shall take
The costliest babink and speckled snake.

She smild to see the doughty hero flun;
But, at her smile, the hero reviv'd again.

But when her anxious lord return'd,
Rais'd his brow, her eyes are dried:
She smiles as William never had mourn'd,
She looks as Mary never had died.

2. To express slight contempt by the look.

Our king smiled, which some will smile at now,
but according to the learning of that time.

Should some more sober caitick come abroad,
If wrong, I smile; if right, I lift the rod.

'Twas what I did to Chops and Child,
Who pleas'd my modesty, and smild.

3. To look gay or joyous.

Let their heirs enrich their time
With smiling plenty and fair prosperous days.

For for the morn,
Unconcern'd with our unrest, begins
Her rosy progress smiling.

All things smild,
Birds on the branches warbling.

The river of bliss through midst of heaven
Rolls o'er Elysian flows her amber stream;

With these, that never fade, the spirits elect
Bind their resplendent locks inwreath'd with beams;

Now in loose garlands thick thrown off, the bright
Pavement, that like a sea of jasper shone,
Impurpled with celestial roses smild.

The desert smild,
And paradise was open'd in the wild.

4. To be favourable, to be propitious.

Then let me not let pit Occasion, which now smile to.

Me all too me in for such a risk I weep;
Yet, if the sov'reign lady deigns to smile,

I'll follow Horace with impetuous feat,
And clothe the verse in Spenser's native style.

SMILE n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A slight contraction of the face; a look of pleasure or kindness: opposed to frown.

I frown upon him, yet he loves me still.—
O! that your frowns would teach my smile such skill.

No man marks the narrow space
'Twixt a prison and a smile.

To these that sober race of men, whose lives
Religious titled them the sons of God,
Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame
Ignobly to the trains and to the smiles

Of these fair atheists.

Sweet intercourse
Of looks and smiles: for smiles from reason flow.

To brute denied, and are of love the food.

2. Gay or joyous appearance.

Yet what avail her unexhausted stores,
Her blooming mountains, and her sunny shores,

cious.

1. Meanly; servilely.

Do all things like a man, not sneakingly;
Think the king sees thee still. Herbert.

While you sneakingly submit,
And beg our pardon at our feet,
Discourag'd by your guilty tears
To hope for quarter for your ears. Hudibras.

2. In a covetous manner.

SNEAKINGNESS. n. f. [from sneaking.]

1. Niggardliness.

2. Meanness; pitifulness.

SNEAKUP. n. f. [from sneak.] A cowardly, creeping, insidious scoundrel. Obsolete.

The prince is a jack, a sneakup; and if he were here, I would cudgel him like a dog, if he would lay so. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

TO SNEAP. v. a. [This word seems a corruption of snib, or of snip, to reprimand. Perhaps snap is in that sense from snib, snibbe, Danish.

Men should him snibbe bitterly. Chau.]

1. To reprimand; to check.

2. To nip.

What may Breed upon our absence, may there blow
No sneaping wind, at home. Shakespeare.

SNEAP. n. f. [from the verb.] A reprimand; a check.

My lord, I will not undergo this sneap without reply; you call honourable boldness impudent sauceriness; if a man will courtly and lay nothing, he is a snail. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

TO SNIB. v. a. [properly to snib. See
SNEAP.] To check; to chide; to reprimand.

Which made this foolish brain woe so bold,
That on a time he call him to hold
And snibbe the good oak, for he was old. Spenser.

TO SNIB. v. n. [This word is apparently of the same family with snore and snore.]

1. To show contempt by looks: nasu suspendere aduocato.

2. To insinuate contempt by covert expression.

The wolf was by, and the fox in a sneering way advised him not to irritate a prince against his subjects. Leffinger.

I could be content to be a little sneered at in a line, for the sake of the pleasure I should have in reading the rest. Pope.

It there has been any thing expressed with too much severity, it will fall upon those sneering, or during writers of the age against religion, who have lost reason and decency. Watts.

3. To utter with grimace.

I have not been sneering fullsome lies, and nauseous flattery, at a little to die when. Congreve.

4. To shew awkward mirth.

I had no power over our muscle in their faces, though they sneered at every word spoken by each of us. Tupper.

SNEER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A look of contemptuous ridicule.

Did not the fear of more impartial men,
At sense and virtue, balance all? Pope.

2. An expression of ludicrous scorn.

Socrates or Cæsar might have a fool's coat clasp upon them, and in this dispute neither the wisdom of the one, nor the majesty of the other, could secure them from a sneer. Watts.

SNEER. n. f. [from sneer.] He that sneers or shows contempt.

TO SNEEZE. v. n. [meran, Saxon; niesen, Dutch.] To emit wind audibly by the nose.

If one be about to sneeze, rubbing the eyes till tears run will prevent it: for that the humour descending to the nostrils is diverted to the eyes. Bac.
If the pain be more intense and deeper within, amongst the membranes, there will be an itching in the palate and nostrils, with frequent sneezing.
Wise's Surgery.

To that Cupid sneez'd aloud;
And every lucky union sent before,
To meet the landing on the Spartan shore. Dryd.

It any thing oppresses the head, it hath a power to free itself by sneezing. Ray on the Creation.

Violent sneezing produceth convulsions in all the muscles of respiration: to great an alteration can be produced only by the tickling of a feather; and if the action of sneezing should be continued by some very acid substance, it will produce headach, universal convulsions, fever, and death. Arbutnot.

An officer put the sharp end of his half-pike a good way up into my nostril, which tickled my nose like a straw, and made me sneeze violently. Swift.

SNEEZE. n. f. [from the verb.] Emission of wind audibly by the nose.

I heard the rattle,
As earth and sky would rumble; but
These flaws, though mortals fear them,
As dangerous to the polar frame of heav'n,
Are to the main as wholestems as a sneeze.
To man's less universe, and soon are gone.
Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

We read in Godignus, that upon a sneeze of the emperor of Momotapa, there passed acclamations successively through the city. Brown's Vulg. Lit.

SNEEZEWORT. n. f. [ptarmica, Latin.]
A plant.

SNET. n. f. [among hunters.] The fat of a deer. Dict.

SNEW. The old preterite of to snow. Dict.

TO SNIB. v. a. [snibbe, Danish. See
SNEAP.] To check; to nip; to reprimand.

Asked for their pa's by every squib,
That lit at will them to revile or snib. Hob. Tail.

SNICK and SNICE. n. f. A combat with knives.

Among the Dunkirkers, where snick and snice was in fashion, a boatwain, with some of our men drinking together, became quarrelsome: one of our men beat him down; then kneeling upon his broad, he drew out a knife sticking in his thigh, and cut him from the ear towards the mouth.
Wise's Surgery.

TO SNI'CKER or Snigger. v. n. To laugh sily, wantonly, or contemptuously;
to laugh in one's sleeve. Dict.

TO SNIFF. v. n. [sniffa, Swedish.] To draw breath audibly up the nose.

So then you look'd scornful; and I sniff at the dean,
As who should say, Now art I skinny and lean?
Swift.

TO SNI'GGLE. v. n.

Sniggle is thus performed: in a warm day, when the water is lowest, take a strong small hook, tied to a string about a yard long; and then into one of the holes, where an eel may hide herself, with the help of a short stick put in your bait leisely, and as far as you may conveniently: if within the sight of it, the eel will bite instantly, and as certainly gorge it; pull him out by degrees.
Wolton's Angler.

TO SNIP. v. a. [snippen, Dutch.] To cut at once with scissars.

The sinus should be laid open, which was snip up about two inches with a pair of probe-scissars, and the incised lips dressed. Wise's Surgery.

When tradesmen brought extravagant bills, Sir Roger glad to bargain to cut off a quarter of a yard: he wore a pair of scissars for this purpose, and would snip it off nicely. Arbutnot.

Putting one blade of the scissars up the gut, and the other up the wound, snip the whole length of the fistula. Sharp.

SNIP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A single cut with scissars.

What! this a snipe?

Here's snip and nip, and cut, and slash and slash,
Like to a censor in a barber's shop. Shakespeare.

The ulcer would not cure farther than it was laid open; therefore with one snip more I laid it open to the very end. Wife'sman.

2. A small shred.

Those we keep within compass by small snips of emphatic, hoping to defend the parts about, but, in spite of all, they will spread farther. Wife'sman's Surge.

3. A share; a snack. A low word.

He found his friend upon the mending hand, which he was glad to hear, because of the snip that he himself expected upon the dividend. L'Estrange

SNIPER. n. f. [sneppe, German; snipe, Saxon; ysnit, Welsh.]

1. A small fen fowl with a long bill.

The external evidence causes of the snipe bills are a high fermenting diet, as old chest, birds feed ing in fens, as geese, ducks, woodcocks, snipes, and swans. Flyer.

2. A fool; a blockhead.

Thus do I ever make my fool my purse;
For I mine own gain'd knowledge should profane,
If I should time expend with such a snipe,
But for my sport and profit. Shakespeare's Othello.

SNIPPER. n. f. [from snip.] One that snips.

SNIPPER. n. f. [from snip.] A small part; a share.

Witches, simplings, and on gibbers
Cutting from malicefactor snippers,
Or from the pillory tips or tails. Hudibras.

SNIPSNAP. n. f. [a cant word formed by reduplication of snip.] Tart dialogue, with quick replies.

Denials and dissonance, and capacious art,
And snipsnap short, and interruption smart.
Pope's Dunciad.

SNITE. n. f. [snita, Saxon] A snipe.
This is perhaps the true name, but snipe prevails.

Of tame birds Cornwall hath doves, geese, and ducks: of wild, quail, rail, snite, and wood-dove.
Carew.

To SNITE. v. a. [snytan, Saxon.] To blow the nose.

Nor would any one be able to snite his nose, or to sneeze; in both which the passage of the breath through the mouth, being intercepted by the tongue, is forced to go through the nose. Grew's Colours.

SNIVEL. n. f. [snivel, snivel, German.]
Snot; the running of the nose.

To SNIVEL. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To run at the nose.

2. To cry as children.

Funeral tears are hired out as mourning cloaks;
and whither we go to our graves snivelling or singing, 'tis all mere form. L'Estrange.

Away goes he snivelling and yelping, that he had dropt his axe into the water. L'Estrange.

SNIVELLER. n. f. [from snivel.] A weeper; a weak lamenter.

He'd more lament when I was dead,
Than all the snivellers round my bed. Swift.

To SNORE. v. n. [snorcken, Dutch.] To breathe hard through the nose, as men in sleep.

I did unconsciously blame the gods,
Who wake for thee, though thou snore for thyself.
Ben Jonson.

Whose railing heroes, and whose wounded gods,
Makes some suspect he snORES as well as nods.
R. fromman.

He may lie in his shades, and snore on to doom's-day for me; unless I see farther season of disturbing his repose. Stillingfleet.

Is not yonder Proteus' cave?

It is, and in it lies the god asleep;

And snoring by

We may detect

The monstrosities of the deep. Dryden's Allin.

The giant, gorg'd with fish, and wine, and blood,

Lay stretch'd at length, as if snoring in his own

Belching raw gibbets from his jaws, o' which he'd

With purple wine and cruddled gore continu'd.

SNORE. n. f. [snora, Saxon, from the verb] Audible respiration of sleepers through the nose.

The farted groans

Drum'd their charge with snores I've drugg'd their podgers. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

SNO'ER. n. f. [from snore.] He that snores.

To SNORT. v. n. [snorcken, Dutch] To blow through the nose as a high-mettled horse.

The snorting of his horses was heard.

Johnson, viii. 16

The fiery war horse paws the ground,
And snorts and trembles at the trumpet's sound.

Johnson.

From their full jacks the generous steeds retire,
Dropping ambrosial foams, and snorting fire.

Johnson's Ovid.

He with wide nostrils, snorting, skims the wave.

Johnson.

SNOT. n. f. [snore, Saxon; snoot, Dutch.]
The mucus of the nose.

Thus, when a greedy flower once has thrown
His snoot into the mire, 'tis all his own. Swift.

SNO'Y. adj. [from snoot.] Full of snot.
This igne South my husband took in a dirty
snooty-nosed boy. Arcturion.

SNO'UT. n. f. [snuyt, Dutch.]

1. The nose of a beast.

His nose in the air, his snout in the sky. Taffer.

In shape a baggie's whole throughout,

With broader forehead, and a sharp snout. Dryd.

2. The nose of a man, in contempt.

Her nose snout

Did quickly wind his meaning out. Hudibras.

But when the date or Nock was out,

Off dropt the sympathetic snout. Hudibras.

What snout tips he hit,

How foul a snout, and what a hanging face!

Dryden's Jovial.

Charm'd with his eyes, as a ching, and snout,
Her pocket gliss drew shyly out;

And grew enamour'd with her phiz,
As just the counterpart of his. Swift.

3. The nosel or end of any hollow pipe.
SNO'UTED. adj. [from snout.] Having a snout.

Then dogs, snouted like foxes, but deprived of that property which the logicians call primum quartum

mo's, for they could not bark. Heylyn

Snouted and tailed like a boar, and footed like a goat. Grew.

SNOW. n. f. [snap, Saxon; snie, Dutch.]
The small particles of water frozen before they unite into drops. Locke

Drought and heat consume snow waters.

Job, xxiv. 19.

He gives the winter's snow her airy birth,

And bids her virgin fleeces clothe the earth. Sandys.

Soft as the fleeces of defending snows. Pope.

To SNOW. v. n. [snapan, Saxon; snecruwen, Dutch.] To fall in snow.

The hills being high about them, it snows at the tops of them oftener than in the rains. Brown's Trav.

To SNOW. v. a. To scatter like snow.
If thou be't horn to ice strange sights,
Ride ten thousand days and nights,

Till age snow white hairs on thee. Donne.

SNO'WBALL. n. f. [snow and ball.] A round lump of congelated snow.

They passed to the east-riding of Yorkshire, their company daily increasing, like a snowball in rolling.
Hayward.

His bulky folly gathers as it goes,

And, rolling o'er you, like a snowball grows. Dryd.

A snowball having the power to produce in us the ideas of white, cold, and round, the powers, as they are in the snowball, I call qualities, and, as they are sensations in our understandings, ideas.

Locke.

SNO'WBROTH. n. f. [snow and broth.]
Very cold liquor.

Anglo, a man whose blood

Is very snowbroth, one who never feels

The want in things and not in the life. Shak.

SNO'WFLIE. n. f. [viola bulbosa, Latin.]
An herb.

SNO'WDROP. n. f. [narissolucoidium, Lat.]
An early flower.

When we tried the experiment with the leaves of those purely white flowers that appear about the end of winter, called snowdrops, the event was not much unlike that newly men loved. Boyle on Col.

The little shape, by make and power,

Grew less and less, contracted to a flower;

A flower that hid in this sweet garden bed,

To virgin a maid, and the proud of it id. Talld.

SNOW-WHITE. adj. [snow and white.]
White as snow.

A snow white bull shall on your shore be slain;

His often's enials cast into the main. Dryd. Æn.

SNO'WY. adj. [from snow.]

1. White like snow.

So flows a snowy dove trooping with crows,

As vonter lady o'er her fellows flows. Shakespeare.

Now I see thy jolly snow:

Snowy headed winter teases;

Spring and summer next succeeds;

Yellow autumn brings aile rear;

Thou art father of the year. Rome.

The blushing ruby on her snowy breast

Renders its panting whiteness more confest. Prior.

2. Abounding with snow.

These first in Crete

And Ida known; thence on the snowy top

Or cold Olympus told the middle air. Mit. Par. L.

As when the Tartar from his Russian foe,

By African, over the snowy plains

Retires. Milton's Paradise Lost.

SNUB. n. f. [from snubbe, Dutch, a nose;
or knubel, a joint of the finger.] A jag;
a snag; a knot in wood.

Lapping up his dreadful club on high,

All aim'd with rugged snubs, and knotty grain,

Hum thought at first encounter to have slain. F. Q.

To SNUB. v. a. [rather To snub. See
SNAP, SNIB, SNIB.]

1. To check; to reprimand.

2. To nip.

Near the sea-shores, the heads and boughs of trees run out far to landward; but to ward the sea are so snubbed by the winds, as if their boughs had been pared or thaven off. Ray on the Creation.

To SNUB. v. n. [snuffen, Dutch.] To sob with convulsion.

To SNUDGE. v. n. [sniger, Danish.] To lie idle, cloie, or snug.

Now he will fight it out, and to the wars;

Now eat his bread in peace,

And snuage in quiet; now he scorns increase;

Now all day spares. Herbert.

SNUFF. n. f. [snuff, Dutch, snot.]

1. Snot. In this sense it is not used.

2. The useless excrecence of a candle:
whence maucher la chandelle.

My snuff and leathard part of nature should Burn itself out. Shakespeare's King Lear.

But dearest heart, and dearer image, stay!

Alas! true joys at best are dreams enough:

Though you stay here, you pass too fast away;

For even at first life's taper is a snuff. Donne.

If the liquor be of a close and glutinous consistency, it may burn without any snuff, as we see in candlesticks, and some other bituminous substances;
and most of the ancient lamps were of this kind,
because none have been found with such wicks.

Widius.

3. A candle almost burnt out.

Lamentable!

To hide me from the radiant sun, and follow
The tongue by a snuff. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

4. The fired wick of a candle remaining after the flame.

A torch, snuff and all, goes out in a moment,
When dipped into the vapour. Addison on Italy.

5. Repentment expressed by snuffing; per-verse repentment. Not used unless in low language.

What hath been seen

Fallen in snuffs or packings of the duke's;
Or the hard tein which both of them have borne Against the old kind king. Shakespeare, King Lear.
Jupiter took snuff at the contempt, and punished him: he sent him home again. L'Esrange.

6. Powdered tobacco taken by the nose.

Just where the breath of life his nostrils drew,
A charge of snuff the wily wretch threw,
The groom, direct, to his atom just,
The pungent grain of irritating dust. Pope.

To SNUFF, v. a. [snuffen, Dutch.]

1. To draw in with the breath.

A heifer will put up her nose, and snuff in the air, against rain. Racon.

With delight he snuff'd the smell
Of mortal change on earth. Milton's Paradise Lost.
He snuffs the wind, his heels the fard excite;
But when he stands collected in his night,
He roars, and promises a more successful fight. Dryden.

The youth,
Who holds the torch station to the light,
Already seems to snuff the vital air,
And leans just forward on a shining spear. Dryden's Æneid.

My troops are mounted; their Numidian steeds
Snuff up the wind, and long to scour the desert. Addison.

My nation's greatest fault was snuffing up the air about Brackdenstown, whereby he became such a lover of liberty, that I could scarce hold him in, Swift.

2. To scent.

The cow looks up, and from afar can find
The change of heav'n, and snuffs it in the wind. Dryden.

For then the bull, rebellow through the groves,
And tempt the stream, and snuff their absent loves. Dryden.

O'er all the blood-hound boasts superior skill,
To scent, to view, to turn, and boldly kill!
His fellows vain alarms reject with scorn,
True to the master's voice, and learned how
His nostrils oft, if ancient time long true,
Trace the sly felon through the tainted dew:
Once snuff'd, he follows with unalter'd aim,
Nor odours lure him from the chosen game;
Deep-mouth'd he tundera, and instant he views,
Springs on relentless, and to death pursues. Tatler.

3. To crop the candle.

The late queen's gentlewoman!
To be her mistress's stick!
This candle burn not clear: 'tis I must snuff it,
And out it goes. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Against a common in day our lamps should be dressed, our lights snuffed, and our religion more active. Taylor.

You have got
An office for your talents fit;
To snuff the lights, and stir the fire,
And get a dinner for your hire. Swift.

SNUFF, v. n.

To snort; to draw breath by the nose.

The fury fires the pack; they snuff, they vent,
And feed their hungry nostrils with the scent. Dryden's Æneid.

Says Humpus, Sir, my master had me pray
Your company to dine with him to-day:
He snuffs, then follows, up the stairs he goes;
Never pulls off his hat, nor cleans his shoes. King.

2. To snuff in contempt.

Ye snuff, what a weariness is it, and ye have snuffed at it. Mol. II. 13.

SNUFFBOX, n. f. [snuff and box.] The box in which snuff is carried.

If a gentleman leaves a snuffbox on the table, and goes away, lock it up as part of your wails. Swift.

Sir Plume, of amber snuffbox justly vain,
And the nice conduct of a clouded cone. Pope.

SNUFFER, n. f. [from snuff.] He that snuffs.

SNUFFERS, n. f. [from snuff.] The instrument with which the candle is clipped.

When you have snuffed the candle, leave the snuff as open. Swift's Directions to the Butler.

To SNUFFLE, v. n. [snuffelen, Dutch.]

To speak through the nose; to breathe hard through the nose.

A water-spout can be seen on the river, showing that he hunted for a snail; and with a snuffling grace, disdaining that his smelly force could not as well prevail through the water as through the air, waited with his eye to see whether he could espy the duck's getting up again. Sidney.

Bagpipes of the loudest dionce,
With snuffling broken-winded tones,
Whole blast of air, in pockets shut,
Sound fitter than from the gut. Hudibras.

I came to the ape to deliver his opinion, who snuff'd and snuffed, and considered on't. L'Esrange.

One clad in purple
I sits, and recites some lamentable rhyme,
Some senseless Phillis in a broken note,
Snuffing at noise, and creaking in his throat. Dryden.

SNUFFLER, n. f. [from snuffle.] He that speaks through the nose.

To SNUG, v. n. [snuger, Dutch.] To lie close.

There snugging well, he well appear'd content,
So to have done amiss, so to be inert. Sidney.

As the loving couple lay snugging together, Ven-nus to it, as she had changed her manners with her shape, turned a mouse loose into the chamber. L'Esrange.

SNUG, adj. [from the verb.]

1. Close; free from any inconvenience;
yet not splendid.

They spied a country farm,
Where all was snug, and clean, and warm;
For woods before, and hills behind,
Secur'd it both from rain and wind. Prior.

2. Close; out of notice.

At Will's
Lie snug, and hear what criticks say. Swift.

3. Slyly or insidiously close.

Did I not see you, rascal! did I not,
When you lay snug, to snap young Damon's goat? Dryden.

To SNUGGLER, v. n. [from snug.] To lie close; to lie warm.

So, adv. [ppa, Sax. soo, Dutch; so, Germ.]

1. In like manner. It answers to as either preceding or following. Noting comparison.

As whom the fables feign of monstrous size,
Titanian or earthborn, that war'd on Jove,
So stretch'd out huge in length the arch bend lay. Milton.

I tick as autumnal leaves that strew the brooks
In Valambrosa, where the Etrurian shades
High over-arch'd embow'r, so thick bestrewn, Abjert and lost, lay these. Milton.
Fir'd at first light with what the muse imparts,
In fearless youth we tempt the heights of arts;

So pleas'd at first the towering Alps we try,
Mount o'er the vales, and seem to tread the sky. Pope.

As into air the purer spirits flow,
And separate from their kindred dregs below,
So flew her soul to its congenial place. Pope.

2. To such a degree.

Why is his chin not so long in coming?
Judges, v. 28.

Can nothing great, and at the height,
Remain so long, out its own weight
Will ruin it? Or is't blind chance That still desires new states to advance?
Ben Jonson's Cataline.

Amoret, my lovely fog,
Tell me where thy strength does lie,
Where the power that charms us so,
In thy soul, or in thy eye?
I viewed in my mind, so far as I was able, the beginning and progress of a rising world. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Since then our Arcite is with honour dead,
Why should we mourn that he so soon is dead. Dryden.

Upon our first going into a company of strangers, our benevolence or aversion rises towards several particular persons, before we have heard them speak, or so much as know who they are. Addison's Spectator.

We think our fathers fools, so wife we're grown;
Our wiser sons, no doubt, will think us so. Pope.

3. In such a manner.

There's no such thing as that we beauty call,
It is meer cozenage all;
For though some long ago
Lik'd certain colours mingled so and so,
That doth not tie me now from chusing new. Su King.

We may be certain that man is not a creature that hath wings, because this only concerns the manner of his existence; and we, seeing what he is, may certainly know that he is not so or so. Locke.
I shall minutely tell him the steps by which I was brought into this way, that he may judge whether I proceeded rationally, if so be any thing in my example is worth his notice. Locke.

This gentleman is a person of good sense, and knows that he is very much in Sir Roger's esteem, so that he lives in the family rather as a relative than dependent. Addison.

4. It is regularly answered by as or that, but they are sometimes omitted.

So brown'd the mighty combant, that he'll Grow darker at their frown. Milton.

There is something equivalent in France and Scotland; so as 'tis a very hard calumny upon our soil to affirm that so excellent a fruit will grow here. Tatler.

5. In the same manner.

Of such examples add me to the roll,
Me easily indeed mine may neglect,
But God's propos'd deliverance not so. Milton.
To keep up the tutor's authority, use him with great respect yourself, and cause all your family to do so too. Locke.

According to the multifariousness of this immutability, so are the possibilities of being. Newton.

6. Thus; in this manner.

Not far from thence the mournful hills appear,
So call'd from lovers that inhabit there. Dryden.
Does this deserve to be rewarded so?
Did you come here a stranger or a foe? Dryden.
It concerns every man, with the greatest seriousness, to enquire into those matters, whether they be so or not. Tillotson.

No nation ever complained they had too broad, too deep, or too many rivers; they understand better than so how to value those inestimable gifts of nature. Bentley.

So when the first bold vessel dar'd the seas,
High on the stern the Thracian rais'd his strain. Pope.

Whether this be from an habitual motion of the animal spirits, or from the alteration of the constitution by some more unaccountable way, this is certain, that so it is. Locke.

7. Therefore; for this reason; In consequence of this.

The god, though loth, yet was constrain'd to obey;
For longer time than that no living wight
Below the earth might suffer'd to stay;
So back again him brought to living light.

Fairy Queen.

Traffike, or rove ye, and like theeves oppresse
Poor strange adventurers; a quodding so
Your souls to danger, and your lives to woe?

Chapman

If he set industriously and sincerely to perform the commands of Christ, he can have no ground of doubting but it shall prove successful to him, and so all that he hath to do is, to endeavour by prayer, and use of the means, to qualify himself for this blessed condition. Diamond's Pundit's
It leaves instruction, and so instruction, to the sobriety of the settled article, and rule of the church.

Holy day.

Some are fall'n, to dill'bedience fall'n;
And so from heav'n to dropp'd hell.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

God makes him in his own image an intellectual creature, and so capable of dominion. Locke.

8. On these terms; noting a conditional proposition: answered by as.

O goddess! tell what I would say,
Thou know'st it, and I feel too much to pray;
So grant my suit, as I enforce my right,
In love to be thy champion. Dryd. Knight's Tale.
If then exchange we mutually forgiveness;
So may the guilt of all my broken vows,
My penuries to thee, be all forgotten;
As here my soul acquits thee of my death,
As here I put without an angry thought. Reww.
So now kind rains their vital moisture yield,
And swell the future harvest of thy field. Pope.

9. Provided that; on condition that: modo.

Be not fid;
I will into the mind of God or man
May come and go, so unapprov'd, and leave
No spot or blame behind. Milton's Paradise Lost.
So the doctrine be but wholesome and edifying, though there should be a want of exactness in the manner of speaking or reasoning, it may be over-look'd. Atterbury.

'Too much of love thy hapless friend has prov'd,
Too many giddy foolish hours are gone;
May the remaining few know only friendship:
So thou, my dearest, truest, best Allice,
Vouchsafe to lodge me in thy gentle heart,
A partner there; I will give up mankind. Rous.

10. In like manner; noting concession of one proposition and assumption of another: answered by as.

As a war should be undertaken upon a just motive, so a prince ought to consider the condition he is in when he enters on it. Swift.

11. So sometimes returns the sense of a word or sentence going before, and is used to avoid repetition: as, the two brothers were valiant, but the eldest was more so; that is, more valiant. The French article le is often used in the same manner. This mode of expression is not to be used, but in familiar language, nor even in that to be commended.

The fat with plenty fills my heart,
The lean with love makes me too so. Conway.
Who thinks his wife is virtuous, though not so,
Is pleas'd and patient till the truth he know.

Denham.

Not to admire is all the art I know
To make men happy, and to keep them so.

Greec's Horace.

One may as well say, that the configuration shall be only national, as to say that the deuce was so. Burnet.

However soft within themselves they are,
To you they will be valiant by despair;

VOL. II.

For having so guilty, well they know,
To a revenge so late they still are so. Dryden.

He was great and fortune made him so. Dryden.
I laugh at every one, and an old cynick, who laughs at me. Do you so? replied the philosopher;
then you live the meretric life of any man in Athens.

They are beautiful in themselves, and much more so in the noble language peculiar to that great poet. Addison.

Common-place books have been long used by industrious young divines, and still continue so.

Swift.

As to his using ludicrous expressions, my opinion is, that they are not so.

Pope.

The blast to-day is as completely so,
As who began a thousand years ago. Pope.

12. Thus it is; this is the state.

How sorrow shakes him!
So, now the tempest tears him up by th' roots,
And on the ground extends the noble ruin. Lycyd.

13. At this point; at this time.

When
With wild wood-leaves and weeds I lay strew'd his grave,
And on it laid a century of prayers,
Such as I can, twice o'er, I li weep and sigh;
And, leaving so his service, follow you. Shakspeare.

14. It notes a kind of abrupt beginning; well.

O, so, and had you a council
Of ladies too? Who was your speaker, Madam?

B. Jonson's Cataline.

15. It sometimes is little more than an expletive, though it implies some latent or furd comparison. In French, si.

An astringent is not quite so proper, where relaxing the urinary passage is necessary. Arbutnot.

16. A word of assumption; thus be it.

There is Percy; if your father will do me any honour, so; if not, let him kill the next Percy himself. Shakspeare.

I will never bear a base mind; if it be my destiny, so; if it be not, so. No man is too good to leave his prisoner. Shakspeare.

17. A form of petition.

Ready are th' appellants and defendant,
The armouret and his man, to enter the lists;
So please your highness to behold the fight. Shak.

18. So much as. However much. This is, I think, an irregular expression.

So much as you admire the beauty of his verse, his prose is full as good. Pope.

19. So so. An exclamation after something done or known. Corrupted, I think, from cessio.

I would not have thee finger in thy pain:
So so. Shakspeare's Othello.

So so; it works: now, mistress, sit you fast. Dry.

20. So so. [cessio, cessio, Italian.] Indifferently; not much amiss nor well.

He's not very tall, yet for his years he's tall;
His leg is but so so, and yet 'tis well. Shakspeare.

Deliver us from the noiseful reputation of Ab-und So, which some so so writers, I may call them
so, are continually sounding in our ears.

Fulton on the Cliffs.

21. So then. Thus then it is that; there-fore.

So then the Volcians stand but as at first Ready, when time shall prompt them to make road Upon 's again. Shakspeare's Catoianus.

To a war are required a just quarrel, sufficient forces, and a prudent choice of the designs: so then, I will first justify the quarrel, balance the forces, and propound designs. Bacon.

To SOAK. v. n. [rocian, Saxon.]

1. To lie steeped in moisture.

For thy conceit in soaking will draw in More than the common blocks. Shakspeare.

2. To enter by degrees into pores.

Lay a heap of earth in great frosts upon a hollow vessel, putting a canvas between, and pour water upon it, so as to soak through: it will make a hard ice in the vessel, and less apt to dissolve, than ordinarily. Bacon.

Rain, soaking into the strata which lie near the surface, bears with it all such moveable matter as occurs. Woodward.

3. To drink gluttonously and intemperately. This is a low term.

Let a drunkard live that his health decays, his estate wastes, yet the habitual thirst after his cups drive him to the tavern, though he has in his view the loss of health and plenty, the loss of which he confesses is far greater than the tickling of his palate with a glass of wine, or the idle chat of a soaking club. Locke.

To SOAK. v. a.

1. To macerate in any moisture; to steep; to keep wet till moisture is imbibed; to drench.

Many of our princes
Lie drown'd and soak'd in intemperate blood:
So do our vulgar drench their peasant limbs
In blood of princes. Shakspeare's Henry V.
Their land shall be soak'd with blood.

Isa. xxxiv. 7.

There deep Calvus soaks the yellow fens. Dryden.

Wormwood, put into the brine you soak your corn in, prevents the birds eating it. Mortimer.

2. To draw in through the pores.

Thou, whose life's a dream of lazy pleasure:
'Tis all thy business, but 'net's how to shun;
To bask thy naked body in the sun,
Supplying thy stiffen'd joints with fragrant oil;
Then in thy spacious garden walk a while,
To suck the moisture up and soak it in. Dryden.

3. To drain; to exhaust. This seems to be a cant term, perhaps used erroneously for suck.

Plants that draw much nourishment from the earth, and soak and exhaust it, hurt all things that grow by them. Bacon.

A greater sparer than a saver; for though he had such means to accumulate, yet his sports, and his garbisons, and his seatings, when he was only sumptuous, could not but soak his exchequer.

Watson.

SOAKER. n. f. [from soak.]

1. He that macerates in any moisture.

2. A great drinker. In low language.

SOAP. n. f. [sapo, Saxon; sapo, Latin.]

A substance used in washing, made of a lixivium of vegetable alkaline ashes and any unctuous substance.

Soap is a mixture of a fixed alkaline salt and oil;
its virtues are cleansing, penetrating, attenuating, and resolving; and any mixture of any oily substance with salt may be called a soap.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

He is like a refiner's fire, and like suters soap.

Milarch.

A bubble blown with water, first made tenacious by dissolving a little soap in it, after a while will appear tinged with a great variety of colours.

Newton's Opticks.

Soap-earth is found in great quantity on the land near the banks of the river Helanus, seven miles from Smyrna.

Soap-ashes are much commended, after the soap- boilers have done with them, for coal or foul lands.

Mortimer.

As rain-water diminishes their salt, so the moistening of them with chamber-lee or soap-suds adds thereto.

Mortimer.

SOAPBOILER. n. f. [soap and boil.] One whose trade is to make soap.

A soapboiler condescends with me on the duties on cattle-soap.

Addison's Spectator.

SOAPWORT. n. f. [japonaria, Lat.] Is a species of campion.

Miller.

To SOAR, v. n. [forare, Italian.]

1. To fly aloft; to tower; to mount; properly to fly without any visible action of the wings. Milton uses it actively.

"Is but a base ignoble mind

That mounts no higher than a bird can soar. Shak.
Feather'd lion and fledge'd,

They sum'd the air pens, and fear'd the air sublime,
With clarg desist'd the ground. Milton.

2. To mount intellectually; to tower with the mind.

How high a pitch his resolution soars. Shaksp.
Valour soars above

What the world calls misfortune and afflictions. Addison.

3. To rise high.

Who aspires must down as low

As high he soar'd. Milton.

It does rise and sink by fits; at last they soar
In one bright blaze, and then descend no more. Dr. den.

When swallows fleet soar high, and sport in air,
He told us that the weakin would be clear. Gay.

SOAK, n. f. [from the verb.] Towering light.

Within fair

On towering eagles, to all the fowls he seen.
A phoenix. Milton.

To SOB, v. n. [reob, complaining, Saxon. Perhaps it is a mere onomatopoeia copied from the found.] To heave audibly with convulsive sorrow; to sigh with convulsion.

When thy warlike father, like a child,
Told the sad story of my father's death,
He twenty times made pause to sob and weep. Shakspare.

As if her life and death lay on his saying,
Some tears she shed, with sighs and sobbing mixt,
As if her hopes were dead through his delaying. Purssan.

She sigh'd, she sob'd, and furious with despair
She rent her garments, and she tore her hair. Dryden.

When children have not the power to obtain their desire, they will, by their clamour and sobbing, maintain their title to it. Locke on Education.

Sob'd; and with faint eyes

Look'd upwards to the Ruler of the skies. Harte

SOB, n. f. [from the verb.] A convulsive sigh; a convulsive act of respiration obstructed by sorrow.

Break, heart, or cloak with sobs my hated breath,
Do thy own work, admit no foreign death. Dryd.
There out are heard the notes of infant woe,
The short thick sob, loud for joy, and shriller squall. Pope.

A wond'rou bag with both her hands she binds:
There she collect the force of female lungs,
Sighs, sobs, and passions, and the war of tongues. Pope.

To SOB, v. a. To speak. A cant word.

The tree being sob'd and wet, swells. Milton.

SOBER, adj. [sobrius, Lat. sobre, Fr.]

1. Temperate, particularly in liquors; not drunken.

Let a sober, righteous, and godly life. Com. Pr.
The vines give wine to the drunkard as well as to the sober man. Com. Pr.

No sober temperate person, whatever other sin
he may be guilty of, can look with complacency upon the drunkenness and folly of his neighbour. South's Sermon.

2. Not overpowered by drink.

A law there is among the Grecians, whereof Pitracus is author; that he which being overcome with wine did then strike any man, should receive punishment double as much as if he had done the same being sober. Hooker.

Not mad; right in the understanding.

Another, who had a great genius for tragedy, owing the fury of his natural temper, made every man and woman in his party rage mad; there was not a sober person to be had; all was tempestuous and blustering. Dryden.

No sober man would put himself into danger, for the applause of escaping without breaking his neck. Dryden.

4. Regular; calm; free from inordinate passion.

This same young sober blooded boy a man cannot make him laugh. Shakspare.

Cleca travelled all over Peru, and is a grave and sober writer. Abbot's Description of the World.

Young men like wife exhibit to be sober minded. Fitz. ii. 6.

The governor of Scotland being of great courage, and sober judgment, amply performed his duty
both before the battle and in the field. Hayward.

These confusions disposed men of any sober understanding to wish for peace. Clarendon.

Among them some sober men confessed, that as his majesty's affairs then stood, he could not grant
it. Clarendon.

To these that sober race of men, whose lives
Religious titled them the sons of God,
Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame
To the trains and to the smiles. Milton.

Of these fair theists. Milton.

Be your designs ever so good, your intentions ever so sober, and your searches directed in the fear of God. Waterland.

5. Serious; solemn; grave.

Petruchio
Shall offer me, disguised in sober robes.

To old Raptista as a schoolmaster. Shakspare.

Come, civil night,
Thou put a-fused matron, all in black. Shaksp.

'Twilight grey
Had in her sober liv'ly all things clad. Milton.

What parts gay chance from sober Spain?

A little rising rocky chain:
Of men born south or north o' th' hill,
Those seldom move, these ne'er stand still. Prior

For Swift and him desp'ed the face of state,
The sober follies of the wife and great. Pope.

See her sober over a sampler, or gay over a jointed baby. Pope.

To SOBER, v. a. [from the adjective.] To make sober.

A lush learning is a dangerous thing;
Drink deep, or take not the Persian spring;
These shallow draughts intoxicate the brain,
And drinking largely sobers us again. Pope.

SOBERLY, adv. [from sober.]

1. Without intemperance.

2. Without madness.

3. Temperately; moderately.

Let any prince think soberly of his forces, except his militia or natives be valiant soldiers. Ercon.

4. Coolly; calmly.

Whenever children are chastised, let it be done without passion, and soberly, laying on the blows slowly. Locke.

SOBERNESS, n. f. [from sober.]

1. Temperance in drink.

Keep my body in temperance, soberness, and chastity. Common Prayer.

2. Calmness; freedom from enthusiasm; coolness.

A person noted for his soberness and skill in general preparations, made Helmont's experiment succeed very well. Boyle.

The soberness of Virgil might have shewn the difference. Dryden.

SORRIETY, n. f. [from sobriété, French; sobrius, Latin.]

1. Temperance in drink; soberness.

Drunkenness is more uncharitable to the soul, and in scripture is more declaimed against, than gluttony; and sobriety hath obtained to signify temperance in drinking. Taylor.

2. Present freedom from the power of strong liquor.

3. General temperance.

In setting down the force of common prayer,
there was no word that the book should mention either the learning of a fit, or the uprightness of an ignorant, minister: more than that he which describes the manner how to pitch a field, should speak of moderation and sobriety in diet. Hooker.

4. Freedom from inordinate passion.

The libertine could not prevail on men of virtue and sobriety to give up their religion. Rogers.

5. Calmness; coolness.

Livane, with all sobriety and severity, whether the child in the footsteps of nature any such transgression of immoderate virtue, and what the force of imagination is. Paton.

Sobriety in our riper years is the effect of a well concocted warmth; but where the principles are only phlegm, what can be expected but an insipid manhood, and old infancy? Dryden.

If sometimes Ovid appears too gay, there is a secret gratefulness of youth which accompanies his writing, though the staydness and sobriety of age be wanting. Dryden.

6. Seriousness; gravity.

A report without truth, and, I had almost said, without any sobriety or modesty. Waterland.

Mirth makes them not mad;
Nor sobriety sad. Denham.

SOCCAGE, n. f. [see, Fr. a ploughshare; soccagium, barbarous Latin.] In law, is a tenure of lands for certain inferior or husbandly services to be performed to the lord of the fee; all services due for land being knight's service, or soccage:

so that whatever is not knight's service, is soccage. This soccage is of three kinds;
a soccage of free tenure, where a man holdeth by free service of twelve pence a-year for all manner of services. Sec- cage of ancient tenure is of land of ancient demesne, where no writ original shall be sued, but the writ se and son con- fortudinem memeri. Soccage of base tenure is where those that hold it may have none other writ but the merstra ve- run, and such socmen hold not by certain service. Covent.

The lands are not holden at all of her majesty, or not holden in chief, but by a mean tenure:
soccage, or by knight's service. Bacon.

SOCCAGER, n. f. [from soccage.] A tenant by soccage.

SOCIABLE, adj. [sociable, Fr. sociabilis, Latin.]

1. Fit to be conjoined.

Another law toucheth them, as they are sociable part united into one body; a law which bindeth them each to serve unto other's good, and all to prefer the good of the whole before whatsoever their own particular. Hooker.

2. Ready to unite in a general interest.

To make man mild and sociable to man;
To cultivate the wild ferocious savage
With wisdom, discipline. Addison's Cato.

3. Friendly; familiar; convertible.

Them that employ'd beheld
With pity heav'n a high King, and to him call'd
Raphael, the sociable spirit that design'd
To travel with Tobias. Milton.

4. Inclined to company.

In children much solitude and silence I like not, nor anything born before his time, as this must needs be in that sociable and expedit age. Watson.

SOCIABLENESS, n. f. [from sociable.]

1. Inclination to company and converse.

Such as would call her friendship love, and teign
To sociableness a name profane. Dennis.

The two main properties of man are contemplation, and sociableness, or love of converse. Mor.

From

2. Freedom of conversation; good fellowship.

He always used courtesy and modesty, disliked of none; sometimes sociableness and fellowship, well liked by many. Hayward.

SOCIALLY. adv. [from sociable.] Conversibly; as a companion.

Yet not terrible,
That I should fear; nor sociably mild,
As Raphael, that I should much confide in;
But solemn and sublime. Milton.

SOCIAL. adj. [socialis, Latin.]

1. Relating to a general or public interest; relating to society.

To love our neighbor as ourselves, is such a fundamental truth for regulating human society, that by that alone one might determine all the cases in social morality. Locke.

True self-love and social are the same. Pope.

2. Easy to mix in friendly gaiety; companionable.

With me, adieu! yet not with thee remove Thy martial spirit or thy social love. Pope.

3. Consisting in union or converse with another.

Thou in thy secrecy although alone,
Best with thyself accompanied, seek'st not Social communication. Milton.

SOCIALNESS. n. f. [from social.] The quality of being social.

SOCIETY. n. f. [societas, kr. societas, Lat.]

1. Union of many in one general interest.

If the power of one society extend likewise to the making of law for another society, as it the church could make laws for the state in temporals, or the state make laws binding the church relating to spirituals, then is that society entirely subject to the other. Leffey.

2. Numbers united in one interest; community.

As the practice of piety and virtue is agreeable to our reason, so is it for the interest of private persons and public societies. Tillotson.

3. Company, converse.

To make society
The sweeter welcome, we will keep ourself
Till supper-time alone. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
While I was big in clamour, came there a man,
Who, having seen me in my worst state,
Shun'd my abhor'd society. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Solitude sometimes is best society,
And stout retirement urges sweet return. Milton.

4. Partnership; union on equal terms.

Among unequal what society can last? Milton.
Heaven's greatest gift, no society can bear;
Servants he made, and those thou want'st not here. Dryden.

SOCK. n. f. [socus, Latin; rocc, Saxon; sokke, Dutch.]

1. Something put between the foot and shoe.

For I lead this life long, I'll sow neither forks, and mend them, and foot them too. Shakespeare's Hamlet IV.
A physician, that would be mystical, preferbeth for the rheum to walk continually upon a camomile alley; meaning he should put camomile within his socks. Bacon.

2. The shoe of the ancient comick actors, taken in poems for comedy, and opposed to buskin or tragedy.

Then to the well-trad stage anon,
If Jonson's learned fork be on,
Or sweetest Shakespeare, toney's child,
Waile his native wood-notes will. Milton.
Great Fletcher never treads in buskins here,
Not greater Jonson dares in feet appear;
But gentle Drunken just reception finds Amidst the monument of vanishing minds. Dryden.
On two figures of actors in the villa Maurel at Rome, we see the fashion of the old sock and larva. Addison.

SOCKET. n. f. [souchette, Fr.]

1. Any hollow pipe; generally the hollow of a candlestick.

Two gaudy beacons, set in watches' stead,
Therein gave light, and flamed continually;
For they of living fire most subtilly
Were made, and set in silver sockets bright. Pope.

She at your flames would soon take fire,
And like a candle in the socket Dissolve. Hudibras.

The nightly virgin fears
When sparkling lamps their sparkling light advance,
And in the sockets only bubbles dance. Dryden.
The stars unmov'd ran backward from the sight,
And, drunk within their sockets, lost their light. Dryden.

Two fire comets
In their own plague and fire have breath'd their life,
Or durn'd in their sinking sockets down. Dryden.

To nurse up the vital flame as long as the matter will last, is not always good husbandry; it is much better to cover it with an extinguisher of honour, than let it consume till it burns blue, and has agonizing within the socket, and at length goes out in no perfume. Collier.

2. The receptacle of the eye.

His eye-balls in their hollow sockets sink;
Bereft of sleep, he loaths his meat and drink;
He withers at his heart, and looks as wan
As the pale spectre of a murder'd man. Dryden.

3. Any hollow that receives something inserted.

The sockets and supporters of flowers are figured;
as in the five brethren of the rose, and sockets of gillyflowers. Bacon.

Comphagus is the connection of a tooth to its socket. Wise.

As the weight leans wholly upon the axle, the grating and rubbing of these axes against the sockets wherein they are placed, will cause some inaptitude and resistance to that rotation of the cylinder which would otherwise ensue. Wilkins.

On either side the head produce an ear,
And sink a socket for the shining hair. Dryden.

SOCKETCHISEL. n. f. A stronger sort of chisels.

Carpenters, for their rougher work, use a stronger sort of chisels, and distinguish them by the name of socketchisels, their shank made with a hollow socket at-top, to receive a strong wooden sprig made to fit into the socket. Mason.

SOLE. n. f. [With architects.] A flat square member under the bases of pedestals of statues and vases: it serves as a foot or stand. Bailey.

SOCMAN or SOCCAGER. n. f. [socajman, Saxon.] A sort of tenant that holds lands and tenements by socage tenure, of which there are three kinds. See SOCCAGE. Corwell.

SO'COME. n. f. [In the old law, and in Scotland.] A custom of tenants obliged to grind corn at their lord's mill. Bailey.

SON. n. f. [soet, Dutch.] A turf; a clod.

The sexton shall green sods on thee bestow;
Alas! the sexton is thy banker now. Swift.
Here fame shall dress a sweeter sod.
Than fancy's feet have ever trod. Collier.

SOD. The preterite of seethe.

Never caldron sod
With so much fervour, fed with all the store
That could arrange it. Chapman.
Jacob's sod putrage. Gen. xxv. 29

SODALITY. n. f. [sodalitas, Latin.] A fellowship; a fraternity.

A new confraternity was instituted in Spain, of the slaves of the Blessed Virgin, and his sodality established with large indulgences. Stillingfleet.

SO'DEN. [the participle passive of seethe.] Boiled; seethed.

Can sodden water, their barley broth,
Decoct their cold blood to such valiant heat? Shakespeare.
Sudden business! there's a few'd phrase had not Sodden. Shakespeare.

Thou sodden witted lord, thou hast no more in thine I have in my elbow. Shakespeare's Twelfth and Goffe.
Tie it with milk soder, and with cream soder.
Mix it with sodden wares and in use. Dryden.

TO SO'DER. v. a. [soder, French; souderen, Dutch.] It is generally written solder, from soldare, Italian; soldare, Latin.] To cement with some metallick matter.

Hell it joineth with the hammer encourageth him that Gaule the anvil, sign, it is ready for soldering. Isaiah.

SO'DER. n. f. Metallick cement.

Still the difficulty returns, how these hooks were made: what is it that fastens this solder, and links these first principles of bodies into a chain? Claudian on Pride.

SOE. n. f. [sar, Scottish.] A large wooden vessel with hoops, for holding water; a cowl.

A pump grown dry will yield no water; but pouring a little into it first, for one basin-tull you may fetch up as many sea-fulls. Mure.

SOE'VER. adv. [so and ever.] A word properly joined with a pronoun or adverb, as whosoever, whatsoever, howsoever.

What great thing soever a man proposed to do in his life, he should think of achieving it; Isaiah.

What love soever by an heir is shown,
Or you could ne'er suspect my loyal love. Dryden.

SO'FA. n. f. [I believe an eastern word.] A splendid seat covered with carpets.

The king leaped off from the sofa on which he sat, and cried out, 'Is my Abdalah?' Guardian.

SOFT. adj. [roft, Saxon; sift, Dutch.]

1. Not hard.

Hard and soft are names we give things, only in relation to the constitutions of our own bodies; that being called hard, which will pass to pain sooner than change figure, by the pressure of any part of our bodies; and that soft, which changes the situation of its parts upon an easy touch. Locke.

Some bodies are hard, and some soft: the hardness is caused by the junction of the spirits, which, if in a greater degree, make them not only hard, but tough. Bacon.

Hot and cold were in one body fixt,
And soft with hard, and light with heavy mixt. Dryden.

2. Not rugged; not rough.

What went you out for to see? a man clothed in soft raiment? behold, they that wear soft rai-

3. Ductile; not unchangeable of form.

Spirits can either take assume; to soft
And uncompounded is their essence pure. Milton.

4. Facile; flexible; not resolute; yielding.

A few divines of so soft and servile tempers as disposed them to so sudden acting and compliance. King Charles.

One king is too soft and easy; another too fiery. L'Estrange.

5. Tender; timorous.

What he hath done famously, he did it to that end; though soft conscientious men can be content to say, it was for his country. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

However soft within themselves they are,
To you they will be valiant by despair. Dryden.

Must be the verse, how well soe'er it flow,
That tends to make one worthy man my foe;
Give virtue scandal, innocence a fear,
Or from the soft-eyed virgin steal a tear. Pope.

Mild; gentle; kind; not severe.

Would my heart were flint, like Edward's;
Or Edward's soft and pitiful like mine. Shakespeare.
Our torments may become as soft as now I were. Milton.

Yet soft his nature, though severe his lay;
His anger moral, and his wisdom gay. Pope.
Meek; civil; complaisant.

Thou art then, felds, and, being bred in broils,
Hast not the soft way, which thou dost confess
Were fit for thee to use, as they to claim,
In asking thee good loves. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Placid; still; easy.

On her soft side while she paces even,
She bears thee soft with the smooth air along. Milton.

There, soft extends to the murmuring sound
Of the high porch, Ulysses sleeps profound. Pope.
Effeminate; vitiously nice.

This sense is also mistress of an art
Which to soft people sweet perfumes doth sell;
Though this dear art doth little good impart,
Since they smell best that do of nothing smell. Davies.

An idle and soft course of life is the source of criminal pleasures. Bacon.

Delicate; elegantly tender.
Her form more soft and luminous. Milton.
Less winning soft, less amiably mild. Milton.

Weak; simple.
The deceiver soon found this soft place of Adam's, and innocency it did not secure him. Glanville.

Gentle; not loud; not rough.
Her voice was ever soft,
Gentle, and low; an excellent thing in women. Shakespeare.

The Dorian mood of flutes and soft recorders.
When some great and gracious monarch dies,
Soft whispers hiss, and mournful murmurs, rise
Among the sad attendants; then the sound
Soon gathers voice. Dryden.

Soft whispering, thus to Nestor's son,
His head reclined, young Ithacus begun. Pope.

Smooth; flowing; not vehement; not rapid.
The solemn nightingale tun'd her soft lays. Milton.

Soft were my numbers; who could take offence;
When smooth description held the place of sense. Pope.

Hark! the numbers soft and clear Gently steal upon the ear. Pope.

Not forcible; not violent.
Sleep falls with soft slumbrous weight. Milton.

Mild; not glaring.
The sun shining upon the upper part of the clouds, made them appear like fine down or wool,
and made the softest sweetest lights imaginable. Brown's Travels.

SOFT. interj. Hold; stop; not so fast.
But soft, I pray you; did King Richard then Proclaim my brother? Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Oh! come in, Emilia;
Soft, by and by, let me the curtains draw. Shak.
But soft, my mate; the world is wide,
And all at once was not detected. Suckling.

SOFTEN. v. a. [from soft.]
To make soft, to make less hard.

Bodies, into which the water will enter, long seething will rather soften than indurate. Bacon's Natural History.

Their arrow's point softly soften in the flame,
And bounding hammer break its barbed flame. Gay.

To intemperate; to make less fierce or obstinate; to mollify.

Softened stony hearts.
Let not our faults, or conceal them,
or them by their representation. Addison.
could correct the harsh expressions of one party,
and reconciling methods. Watts.

3. To make easy; to compose; to make placid; to mitigate; to palliate; to alleviate.

Call round her tomb each object of desire;
Bid her be all that cheeks or softens life,
The tender sister, daughter, friend, and wife. Pope.
Mute the fiercest griefs can charm;
Music can soften pain to ease,
And make despair and madness please. Pope.

4. To make less harsh, less vehement, less violent.

He bore his great commission in his look,
But sweetly temper'd awe, and soften'd all he spoke. Dryden.

5. To make less glaring.
6. To make tender; to enervate.

TO SOFTEN. v. n.

1. To grow less hard.
My bodies, that will hardly melt, will soften;
as iron in the forge. Bacon's Natural History.

2. To grow less obdurate, cruel, or obstinate.
He may soften at the sight of the child;
The silence often of pure innocence
Persuades, when speaking fails. Shakespeare.

SOFTLY. adv. [from soft.]

1. Without hardness.
2. Not violently; not forcibly.

Solid bodies, if very softly percussed, give no sound;
as when a man treadeth very softly upon boards. Bacon.

3. Not loudly.
Ahab rent his clothes, and went softly. 1 Kings, xxi. 27.

In this dark silence softly leave the town,
And to the general's tent direct your steps. Dryden.

4. Gently; placidly.
Death will dismiss me,
And lay me softly in my native dust,
To pay the forfeit of ill-manag'd trust. Dryden.

She with a wreath of myrtle crowns his head,
And softly lays him on a flow'ry bed. Dryden's Æneid.

4. Mildly; tenderly.
The king must die.
Though pity softly plead within my soul,
Yet he must die, that I may make you great. Dryden.

SOFTNER. n. f. [from soft.]
1. That which makes soft.

2. One who palliates.
Those softeners and expedient-mongers shake their heads so strongly, that we can hear their pockets jingle. Swift.

SOFTNESS. n. f. [from soft.]

1. The quality of being soft; quality contrary to hardness.

Softness cometh by the greater quantity of spirits, which ever induce yielding and cession; and by the more equal spreading of the tangible parts, which thereby are more sliding and following; as in gold. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Mildness; kindness.
A wise man, when there is a necessity of expressing any evil actions, should do it by a word that has a secondary idea of kindness or softness; or a word that carries in it rebuke and severity. Watts's Logic.

3. Civility; gentleness.
They turn the softness of the tongue into the hardness of the teeth. Holyday.

Improve these virtues, with a softness of manners, and a sweetness of conversation. Dryden.

4. Effeminacy; vicious delicacy.
So long as idleness is quite shut out from our lives, all the sins of wantonness, softness, and effeminacy, are prevented; and there is but little room for temptation. Taylor.

He was not delighted with the softness of the court. Clarendon.

5. Timoroufness; pusillanimity:

This virtue could not proceed out of fear or softness; for he was valiant and active. Bacon's Henry VII.

Saving a man's self, or suffering, it with reason, is virtue; it without it, is softness or obstinacy. Grave.

6. Quality contrary to harshness.
Softness of sounds is distinct from the exility of sounds. Bacon.

7. Facility; gentleness; candour; easiness to be affected.

Such was the ancient simplicity and softness of spirit which sometimes prevailed in the world, that they, whose words were even as oracles amongst men, seemed even more loth to give sentences against any thing publicly received in the church of God. Hooker.

8. Contrariety to energetick vehemence.
Who but thyself the mind and ear can please
With strength and softness, energy and ease? Haste.

9. Mildness; meekness.
For contemplation he and valour form'd,
For softness the and sweet attractive grace. Milton.

Her stubborn look
This softness from thy finger took. Waller.

SOHO. interj. A form of calling from a distant place.

TO SOIL. v. a. [Italian, Saxon; soelen, old German; souiller, French.]

1. To foul; to dirt; to pollute; to stain; to sully.

A silly man in simple weeds forlorn,
And soil'd with dust of the long dead way. Fanny Queen.

Although some heretics have abused this text, yet the sun is not soiled in passage. Bacon's Holy War.

If I soil
Myself with sin, I then but vainly toil. Sandys.
I would not soil these pure ambrosial weeds,
With the rank vapours of this sin-worn mould. Milton.

Bad fruit of knowledge, if this be to know,
Which leaves us naked thus, of honour void,
Of innocence, of faith, of purity,
Our wonted ornaments now soil'd and stain'd. Milton.

One, who could not for a taste o' th' flesh come in,
Licks the soil'd earth,
While reeking with a mangled Ombit's blood. Voltaire.

If the eye-glass be tinted faintly with the smoke of a lamp or torch, to obscure the light of the star, the fainter light in the circumference of the star ceases to be visible; and the star, if the glass be sufficiently soiled with smoke, appears something more like a mathematical point. Newton.

An absent hero's bed they fought to soil,
An absent hero's wealth they made their spoil. Pope.

2. To dung; to manure.

Men now present, just as they sit their ground;
not that they love the dirt, but that they expect a crop. South.

3. To soil a horse; to purge him by giving him grass in the spring. It is in Shakespeare to glut. [souiller, French.]

The soiled horse. Shakespeare.

SOIL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Dirt; spot; pollution; foulness.

By indirect ways
I met this crow; and I may self know well
How troublesome it sate upon my head;
To thee it shall descend with better quiet;
For all the soil of the achievement goes
With me into the earth. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

That would be a great soil in the new glass of your marriage. Shakespeare.

Vexed I am with passions,
Which give some soil perhaps to my behaviour. Shakespeare.

A lady's honour must be touch'd,
Which, nice as ermines, will not bear a soil. Dryden.

2. [sol, French; solum, Latin.] Ground; earth, considered with relation to its vegetative qualities.

Judgment may be made of waters by the sol whereupon they run. Bacon's Natural History.

Her spots thou see'st

As clouds, and clouds may rain, and rain produce Fruits in her soft'n'd soil. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The first cause of a kingdom's thriving is the fruitfulness of the soil, to produce the necessities and conveniences of life; not only for the inhabitants, but for exportation. Swift.

3. Land; country.

Dorset, that with fearful soul

Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,

This fair alliance shall call home

To high promotions. Shakespeare.

O unexpected stroke, worse than of death!

Must I thus leave thee, Paradise! thus leave

Thee, native soil! these happy walks and shades,

Fit haunts of gods? Milton.

4. Dung; compost.

The haven has been stopped up by the great heaps of dirt that the sea has thrown into it; for all the soil on that side of Ravenna has been left there insensibly by the sea. Addison.

Improve land by dung, and other sort of soils. Mortimer.

SOI'LINLESS. n. f. [from soil.] Stain; foulness.

Make proof of the incorporation of silver and tin, whether it yield no soiliness more than silver. Bacon.

SOI'LURE. n. f. [from soil.] Stain; pollution.

He merits well to have her,

Not making any scruple of her soilure. Shakespeare.

To SO'JOURN. v. n. [sejourner, French; soggiornare, Italian.] To dwell any where for a time; to live as not at home; to inhabit as not in a settled habitation. Almost out of use.

At, till the expiration of your month,

You will return and sojourn with my sister,

Diminishing both your train, come then to me. Shak.

'Tis advantage of his absence took the king,

And in the mean time sojourn'd at my father's. Shakespeare.

How comes it he is to sojourn with you? how comes acquaintance? Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Here dwells he; though he sojourns every where

In progress, yet his standing house is here. Donne.

The sojourn of Israel, who dwelt in Egypt, was four hundred and thirty years. Exodus, xii. 40.

The soldiers first assembled at Newcastle, and there sojourned three days. Hayward.

To sojourn in that land

He comes invited. Milton's Paradise Lost.

He who sojourns in a foreign country, refers what he sees abroad to the state of things at home. Literbury.

SO'JOURN. n. f. [sejour, Fr. from the verb.] A temporary residence; a casual and no settled habitation. This word was anciently accented on the last syllable: Milton accents it indifferently.

The princes, France and Burgundy,

Long in our court have made their am'rous sojourn. Shakespeare.

There I revisit now,

Escap'd the Stygian pool, though long detain'd

In that obscure sojourn. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Scarce view'd the Gallian towns,

And once a year Jerusalem, few days

Short sojourn. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

SO'JOURNER. n. f. [from sojourn.] A temporary dweller.

We are strangers and sojourners, as were all our fathers: our days on earth are as a shadow. 1 Chron. xix. 16.

Waves o'erthrew

Bafus, and his Memphis chivalry,

While with perfidious hatred they pursued

The sojourners of Goshen. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Not for a night, or quick revolving year;

Welcome an owner, not a sojourn. Dryden.

To SO'LACE. v. a. [solacior, old French; solaxare, Italian; solatium, Latin.] To comfort; to cheer; to amuse.

We will with some strange pastime solace them. Shakespeare.

The birds with song

Solac'd the woods. Milton.

To SO'LACE. v. n. To take comfort; to be recreated. The neutral sense is obsolete.

One poor and loving child,

But one thing to rejoice and solace in,

And cruel death hath catch'd it from my sight. Shakespeare.

Were they to be rul'd, and not to rule,

This sickly land might solace as before. Shakespeare's Richard III.

SO'LACE. n. f. [solatium, Lat.] Comfort; pleasure; alleviation; that which gives comfort or pleasure; recreation; amusement.

Therein sat a lady fresh and fair,

Making sweet solace to herself alone;

Sometimes the sun as loud as laik in air,

Sometimes she laugh'd, that nigh her breath was gone. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

If we have that which is meet and right, although they be glad, we are not to envy the in their solace;

we do not think it a duty of ours to be in every such thing their tormentors. Hooker.

Give me leave to go;

Sorrow would solace, and my age would ease. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Great joy he promis'd to his thoughts, and new

Solace in her return. Milton's Paradise Lost.

If I would delight my private hours

With music or with poem, where so soon

As in our native language can I find

That solace? Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

Though fight be lost,

Life yet hath many solaces, enjoy'd

Where other senses want not their delights,

At home in leisure and domestick ease,

Exempt from many a care and chance, to which Eye-sight exposes daily men abroad. Milton.

Through waters and through flames I'll go,

Suffer and solace of thy woe. Prior.

SOLA'NDER. n. f. [solandres, French.] A disease in horses.

SO'LAR. } adj. [solaire, French; solaris, SO'LARY. } Latin.]

1. Being of the sun.

The corpufcles that make up the beams of light be solar effluvia, or minute particles of some ethereal substance, thrusting on one another from the lucid body. Boyle.

Instead of golden fruits,

By genial show'rs and solar heat supplied,

Unfufferable winter had defac'd

Earth's blooming charms, and made a barren waste. Blackmore.

2. Belonging to the sun.

They denominate some herbs solar, and some lunar. Bacon.

Scripture hath been punctual in other records, concerning solar miracles. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

3. Born under or in the predominant influence of the sun.

The cock was pleas'd to hear him speak so fair,

And proud beside, as solar people are. Dryden.

4. Measured by the sun.

The rule to find the moon's age, on any day of any solar month, cannot shew precisely an exact account of the moon, because of the inequality of the motions of the sun and moon, and the number of days of the solar months. Holden on Time.

SOLD. The preterite and participle pas- sive of sell.

SOLD. n. f. [ouldie, old French. Tre-voux.] Military pay; warlike enter- tainment.

But were your will her sold to entertain,

And number'd be 'mongst knights of maidenhead,

Great guerdon, well I wot, should you remain,

And in her favour high be reckon'd. Fanny Queen.

SO'LDAN. n. f. [for sultan.] The em- peror of the Turks.

plant. Miller.

To SO'LDER. v. a. [solder, Fr. soldare, Ital. soldare, Latin.] See SODER.

1. To unite or fasten with any kind of metallick cement.

A concave sphere of gold, filled with water, and solder'd up, has, upon pressing the sphere with great force, let the water squeeze through it, and stand all over its outside in multitudes of small drops like dew, without bursting or cracking the body of the gold. Newton's Opticks.

2. To mend; to unite any thing broken.

It booteth them not thus to solder up a broken cause, whereof their first and last discourses will fall afunder. Hooker.

Wars 'twixt you twain would be

As if the world should cleave, and that slain men should solder up the rift. Shak. Ant. and Cl. 3. 1. 374.

Thou visible god,

That sold'st the close impenetrabilities,

And made'st them kill! Shakespeare's Timon.

Learn'd he was in medicine lore;

For by his side a pouch he wore

Replete with strange hermetick powder,

That wounds nine miles point-blank would solder. Hudibras.

The naked cynick's jar nether flames; if broken,

'Tis quickly solder'd, or a new bespoken. Dryden's Jun. Fanny.

At the restoration the puritans, and other sects, did all unite and solder up their several hobbies, to join against the church. Swift.

SO'LDER. n. f. [from the verb.] Metallick cement; a metallick body that will melt with less heat than the body to be soldered.

Goldsmiths say, the one best stuff

Will serve for solder well enough. Swift.

SO'LDERER. n. f. [from solder.] One that solders or mends.

SOLDIER. n. f. [soldat, Fr. from soldarius, low Lat. of solidus, a piece of money, the pay of a soldier; soldée, Fr.]

1. A fighting man; a warrior. Originally one who served for pay.

Your sister is the better soldier. Shak. King Lear.

Good Siward,

An older and a better soldier none. Shak. Macbeth.

A soldier,

Full of strange oaths, and bearded like a pard,

Jealous in honour, sudden and quick in quarrel,

Seeking the bubble reputation

Even in the cannon's mouth. Shakespeare.

A hateful service, that dissolv'd the loves

Of many a soldier. Shakespeare.

I have not yet forgot I am a king;

If I have wrong'd thee, charge me face to face;

I have not yet forgot I am a soldier. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

2. It is generally used of the common men, as distinct from the commanders.

It were meet that any one, before he came to be a captain, should have been a soldier. Spenser on Incl.

SO'LDIERLINE. } adj. [soldier and like.] SO'LDIERLY. } Martial; warlike; mil- itary; becoming a soldier.

Although at the first they had fought with beastly fury rather than any soldierly discipline, practice had now made them comparable to the best. Sidney.

Lowell.

I will maintain the word with my sword to be a soldier's word, and a word of good command.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

They, according to a soldierly custom, in cases of extremity, by interchange of a kiss by every of them upon the words of others, sealed a resolution to maintain the place.

Hayward.

Enemies as well as friends confessed, that it was as valiant an action as had been performed on either side.

Clarendon.

SO'LDIERSHIP. n. f. [from soldier.] Military character; martial qualities; behaviour becoming a soldier; martial skill.

Descend some twice or thrice a day. Prior.

Paint, patches, jewels laid aside,
At night astronomers agree,
The evening is the day, bely'd,
And Phyllis is some forty-three. Prior.

6 One; any, without determining which.

The pilot of some small night-founder'd skiff, Milton.

SOME body. n. f. [some and body.]

1. One; not nobody; a person indiscriminate and undetermined.

O that Sir John were come, he would make this nobody day to somebody. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Julius said, somebody hath touch'd me; for I perceive that virtue is gone out of me. Luke, viii. 46.

If there be a tacit league, it is against somebody: who should they be? Is it against wild beasts? No; it is against such routs and shoals of people as have utterly degenerated from the laws of nature. Bacon.

If he had not done it when he did, somebody else might have done it for him. Heylin.

We must draw in somebody, that may stand 'twixt us and danger. Denham's Sobhy.

The hopes that what he has must come to somebody, and that he has no heirs, have that effect, that he has every day three or four invitations. Addison's Spectator.

2. A person of consideration.

Thoudas rose up, boasting himself to be somebody. Ahti.

SO'ME deal. adv. [rumdeal, Saxon.] In some degree. Obsolete.

Siker now I see thou speak'st of spite,
All for thou lackest some delicate their delight. Spenser.

SO'ME how. adv. [some and how.] One way or other; I know not how.

The vesicular cells may be for receiving the arterial and nervous juices, that, by their action upon one another, they may be twell'd *some*how, so as to shorten the length of every fibril. Chym.

SO'ME sault. n. f. Somerse is the corruption.

SO'ME merse. n. f. Somerse: sommer, a beam, and sault, Fr. a leap.] A leap by which a jumper throws himself from a height, and turns over his head.

SO'ME thing. n. f. [rumding, Saxon.]

1. A thing existing, though it appears not what; a thing or matter indeterminate.

When fierce Bavi
Did from afar the British chief behold,
Betwixt despair and rage, and hope and pain,
Something within his warring bosom roll'd. Prior.

The force of the air upon the pulmonary artery is but small, in respect of that of the heart, but it is still something. Arbutnot on Arteries.

You'll say the whole world has something to do, something to talk of, something to wish for, and something to be employed about; but pry into all these *something*s together, and what is the sum total but just nothing? Pope's Letters.

Here she beholds the chaos dark and deep,
Where nameless *something*s in their causes sleep. Pope.

2. More or less; not nothing.

Something yet of doubt remains. Mit. n.

Years following years steal something every day,
At last they steal us from ourselves away. Prior.

Still from his little he could something spare,
To feed the hungry, and to clothe the bare. Harte.

3. A thing wanting a fixed denomination.

Something between a cottage and a cell;
Yet virtue here cou'd sleep, and peace could dwell. Harte.

4. Part.

Something of it arises from our infant state. W.

5. Distance not great.

I will acquaint you with the perfect story of time; for 't must be done to-night, and something from the palace. Shaksp. an.

SO'ME thing. adv. In some degree.

The pain went away upon it, but he was something discouraged by a new pain falling some days after upon his elbow on the other side. Turph.

SO'ME time. adv. [some and time.]

1. Once; formerly.

What art thou that usurp'st this time of night,
Together with that fair and warlike form,
In which the majesty of buried Denmark
Did *some*time march? Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Good *some*time queen, prepare thee hence for France. Shakespeare.

2. At one time or other hereafter.

SO'ME times. adv. [some and times.]

1. Not never; now and then; at one time or other.

It is good that we sometimes be contradicted, and that we always bear it well, for perfect peace cannot be had in this world. Taylor.

2. At one time: opposed to sometimes, or to another time.

The body passive is better wrought upon at sometimes than at others. Bacon's Natural History.

Sometimes the one, and sometimes the other, may be glanced upon in these scripture descriptions. Barnet.

He writes not always of a piece, but sometimes mixes trivial things with those of greater moment.

sometimes also, though not often, he runs riot, and knows not when he has said enough. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

SO'ME what. n. f. [some and what.]

1. Something; not nothing, though it be uncertain what.

Upon the sea *some*what methought did rise
Like bluish mists. Dryden's Indian Emperor.

He that shuts his eyes against a small light, on purpose to avoid the light of *some*what that displeases him, would, for the same reason, shut them against the sun. Atterbury.

2. More or less.

Concerning every of these, *some*what Christ hath commanded, which must be kept till the world's end: on the contrary side, in every of them *some*what there may be added, as the church judges it expedient. Hank.

These poets have *some*what of a stentrous taste, but mixt with a fourth of virtuous. Crow.

3. Part, greater or less.

*Some*what of his good sense will suffer in this transference, and much of the beauty of his thoughts will be lost. Dryden.

SO'ME what. adv. In some degree.

The flower of aimes, Lycymnius, that *some*what aged grew. Chapman.

Hissing of the breath doth help *some*what to cease the hiccough. Bacon's Natural History.

He is *some*what arrogant at his first entrance, and is too inquisitive through the whole, yet these imperfections hinder not our compassion. Dryden.

SO'ME where. adv. [some and where.] In one place or other; not nowhere.

Hope's and fortune
They are return'd, and *some*where live obscure. Dickens.

Compressing two points hard together, that their sides, which by nature were a very little convex, might *some*what touch one another, I found the place in which they touched to become absolutely transparent, as if they had there been one continued piece of glass. Newton's Optics.

Does something fill, and *some*where yet remain Reward or punishment? Prior.

Of the dead we must speak gently, and therefore, as Mr. Dr. Dr. says, *some*where, peace be to its music. Pope.

SO'ME while. n. f. [some and while.]

Once; for a time. Out of use.

Though under a shower of the shepherds *some*while, there cript in wolves, full of fraud and guile,
That often devoured the crown sheep,
And often the shepherd that did 'em keep. Spenser's Pastoral.

SOMNIFEROUS. adj. [somnifer, Fr. some n. f., Latin.] Causing sleep; procuring sleep; soporiferous; dormitive.

I wish for some somniferous potion, that might force me to sleep away the intermediate time, as it does with men in sorrow. Warton's Angler.

SOMNIFICK. adj. [somnus and ficio, Lat.]

Causing sleep.

SOMNOLENCY. n. f. [Somnolentia, Latin.]

Sleepiness; inclination to sleep.

SON. n. f. [junus, Gothick; runa, Saxon; ohn, German; son, Swedish; son, Dutch; syn, Slavonian.]

1. A male born of one or begotten by one; correlative to father or mother.

She had a son for her cradle, ere she had a husband for her bed. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Cut out this bondswoman and her son. Gen. xxi. 10.

He compares the affection of the Divine Being to the indulgence of a wife father, who would have his sons excruciated with labour and pain, that they may gather strength. Addison.

2. Descendant, however distant: as, the sons of Adam.

- I am the son of the wise, the son of ancient kings.
Isaiah, xix.
- Compellation of an old to a young man, or of a confessor to his penitent.
Be plain, good son, and humely in thy drift;
Riddling confusion finds but riddling thrift. Shak.
- Native of a country.
Brit on then
Sees arts her savage sons controul. Pope.
- The second person of the Trinity.
If thou be the son of God, come down.
Mat. xxvii. 40.
- Product of any thing.
Our imperfections print our corruption, and loudly tell us we are sons of earth.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- Earth's tall sons, the cedar, oak, and pine,
Their parent's undecaying strength declare. Blackm.
- In scripture, sons of pride, and sons of light, denoting some quality. It is a Hebraism.
This new favourite
Of heav'n, this man of clay, son of despite. Milt.
- SON-IN-LAW. n. f. [from son.] One married to one's daughter.
If virtue no benighted beauty lack,
Your son-in-law is far more fair than black.
Shakespeare's Othello.
- A foreign son-in-law shall come from far,
Whose race shall bear aloft the Latin name.
Dryden's Æneid.
- SONSHIP. n. f. [from son.] Filiation; the character of a son.
The apostle to the Hebrews makes afflictions not only incident but necessary to christianity, the badge and cognizance of sonship. Deacy of Picty.
- SONATA. n. f. [Italian.] A tune.
He whistled a Scotch tune, and an Italian sonata.
Addysn.
- Could Pedro, think you, make no trial
Of a sonata on his viol,
Unless he had the total gut
Whence every string at first was cut? Prior.
- SONG. n. f. [from perungen, Saxon.]
Any thing modulated in the utterance Noise other than the sound of dance and song.
Milton.
- He first thinks fit no sonnetter advance
His censure farther than the song or dance. Dryd.
- A poem to be modulated by the voice;
a ballad.
Pardon, goddesses of the night,
Those that flew thy virgin knight;
For the which, with songs of woe,
Round about his tomb they go! Shakespeare
In her days every man shall sing
The merry songs of peace to all his neighbours.
Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
3. A poem; lay; strain.
The bard that first adorn'd our native tongue,
Tun'd to his British lyre this ancient song. Dryden.
There we a while will rest,
Our next ensuing song to wondrous things address.
Dayton
4. Poetry; poetry.
This subject for heroic song pleased me. Milt.
Names memorable long
If there be force in virtue or in song. Pope.
5. Notes of birds.
The lark, the singer of day,
Saluted in her song the morning grey. Dryden.
6. Old song. A tune.
I do not intend to be thus put off with an old song.
A hopeful youth, newly advanced to great honour, was teased by a cobbler to resign all for an old song. Addysn.
7. SONNET. adj. [from song.] Containing songs; consisting of songs. A low word.
The sonnet part must abound in the sonnets, and every of them being, attention being to please the ear. Dryden.

- SON'NGER. n. f. [from song.] A finger.
Used of human fingers, it is a word of slight contempt.
The pretty songsters of the spring, with their various notes, did seem to welcome him as he passed.
Howell.
- 'Some songsters can no more sing in any chamber but their own, than some clerks read in any book but their own. L'Estrange.
- Either songster holding out their throats,
And tossing up their wings, renew'd their notes.
Dryden.
- SON'NGSTRESS. n. f. [from song.] A female finger.
Through the soft silence of the listening night
The sober-tinted songstress trills her lay.
Thomson's Summer.
- SON'NNET. n. f. [sonnet, Fr. sonnetto, Ital.]
1. A short poem consisting of fourteen lines, of which the rhymes are adjusted by a particular rule. It is not very suitable to the English language; and has not been used by any man of eminence since Milton, of whose sonnets this is a specimen.
A book was writ of late call'd Tetrachordon,
And woven close, both matter, form, and stile;
The subject new: it walk'd the town a-while,
Numbering good intellects, now seldom port'd on;
Cries the stall-reader, Bless us, what a word on A title-page is this! and some in file
Stand spelling false, while one might walk to Mile-End green. Why is it harder, first, than Gordon, Collins, or Macdonnell, or Galasp?
Those rugged names to our like mouths grow sleek,
That would have made Quintilian stare and gasp;
Thy age, like ours, foul of Sir John Cheek,
Hated not learning worse than toad or asp,
When thou taught'st Cambridge and king Edward Greek. Milton.
2. A small poem.
Let us into the city presently,
To sort some gentleman well skill'd in musick;
I have a sonnet that will serve the turn. Shakespeare.
- SONNETTEER. n. f. [sonnetier, Fr. from sonnet.] A small poet, in contempt.
Alight me, thou immortal god of rhyme; for I am sure I shall create sonnetteers.
Shakespeare's Love's Labour Lost.
- There are as many kinds of gardening as of poetry: your makers of parterres and flower-gardens are epigrammatists and sonnetteers in this art. Spekt.
- What woful stuff this roadrigal would be,
In some starv'd hackney sonnetteer or me!
But let a lord once own the happy lines,
How the wit brightens! how the style refines! Pope.
- SON'FEROUS. adj. [sonus and fero, Lat.]
Giving or bringing sound.
This will appear, let the subject matter of sounds be what it will; either the atmosphere, or the etherial part thereof, or soniferous particles of bodies.
Derham.
- SONOR'IFICK. adj. [sonorus and facio, Lat.]
Producing sound.
If he should ask me why a clock strikes, and points to the hour; and I should say, it is by an indicating form and sonorifick quality, this would be unsatisfactory. Watts's Logic.
- SONOROUS. adj. [sonore, Fr. sonorus,
Lat.]
1. Loud sounding; giving loud or shrill sound. Bodies are distinguished as sonorous or unsonorous.
All the while
Sonorous metal blowing martial sounds;
At which the universal host went
A shout that tore hell's concave.
Milton's Paradise Lost.
2. High sounding; magnificent of sound.
The Italian opera, amidst all the meanness and

- familiarity of the thoughts, has something beautiful and sonorous in the expression. Addison on Italy.
The vowels are sonorous. Dryden.
- SONOROUSLY. adv. [from sonorous.] With high sound; with magnificence of sound.
- SONOROUSNESS. n. f. [from sonorous.]
1. The quality of giving sound.
Enquiring of a maker of viols and lutes of what age he thought lutes ought to be, to attain their full and best reasoning for sonorousness, he replied, That in some twenty years would be requisite, and in others forty. Boyle.
2. Magnificence of sound.
- SOON. adv. [sun, Gothick; rona, Sax.
saen, Dutch.]
1. Before long time be past; shortly after any time assigned or supposed.
Nor did they not perceive their evil plight,
Yet to their general's voice they soon obey'd. Milt.
You must obey me, soon or late;
Why should you vainly struggle with your fate?
Dryden.
2. Early; before any time supposed: opposed to late.
O boy! thy father gave thee life too soon,
And hath bereft thee of thy life too late.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.
Do this, that I may be restored to you the sooner.
Herb. xiii.
How is it that you are come so soon to day?
Ex. ii. 18.
The earlier stayeth for the later, and not that the later cometh sooner. Bacon's Natural History.
3. Readily; willingly.
I would as soon see a river winding through woods and meadows, as when it is tossed up in to many whimsical figures at Versailles. Addysn.
4. It has in Sidney the signification of an adjective, whether licentious or according to the custom of his time.
He hath preserved Argalus alive, under pretence of having him publicly executed after these wars, of which they hope for a soon and prosperous issue.
Sidney.
5. SOON as. Immediately; at the very time.
As soon as he came nigh unto the camp, he saw the calf and the dance. Ex. xxxii. 19.
Nor was his virtue poison'd, soon as born,
With the too early thoughts of being king. Dryd.
Feasts, and business, and pleasures, and enjoyment, seem great things to us, whilst we think of nothing else; but as soon as we add death to them, they all sink into an equal littleness. Law.
- SOONLY. adv. [from soon.] Quickly; speedily. This word I remember in no other place; but if soon be, as it seems once to have been, an adjective, soonly is proper.
A mason meets with a stone that wants no cutting, and, soonly approving of it, places it in his work. More.
- SOOPBERRY. n. f. [sapindus, Lat.] A plant. Miller.
- SOOT. n. f. [rot, Saxon; soot, Islandick; soot, Dutch.] Condensed or embodied smoke.
Soot, though thin spread in a field, is a very good compost. Bacon.
If the fire be not kept within the tunnel of the chimney, and some appointed to sweep down the soot, the house will be in danger of burning. Howell.
Oft they assay'd,
Hunger and thirst constraining; drugg'd as oft
With hatefullest distichs, with'd their jaws,
With soot and cinders fill'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Our household gods, that droop upon our hearths,
Each from his venerable face shall brush
The Macedonian soot, and shine again.
Dryden's Cymon.

SOOTED. adj. [from foot.] Smeared; manured, or covered with foot.

The land was sooted before. Monsther.

SOOTERKIN. n. f. A kind of false birth fabled to be produced by the Dutch women from sitting over their stoves.

When Jove was, from his towering head,
Of wit's fair goddess brought to bed,
There follow'd at his lying-in,
For after-birth, a sooterkinn. Swift.

SOOTH. n. f. [root, Sax.] Truth; reality. Obsolete.

Sir, understand you this of me in sooth,
The youngest daughter, whom you hearken for,
Her father keeps from all access of suitors,
Until the eldest sister first be wed. Shakespeare.
He looks like sooth: he says he loves my daughter,

I think so too; for never gaz'd the moon
Upon the water, as he'll stand and read
My daughter's eyes. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
If I have any skill in soothsaying, as in sooth I have none, it doth prognosticate that I shall change caps. Camden's Remains.

The very sooth of it is, that an ill habit has the force of an ill fate. L'Estrange.

I did not mean to chide you;
For, sooth to say, I hold it noble in you
To cherish the distressed. Rover.

SOOTH. adj. [root, Saxon.] Pleasing; delightful.

Some other means I have,
Which once of Melibrius old I learn'd,
The soothest shepherd that e'er pip'd on plains. Milton.

SOOTH. n. f. Sweetness; kindness. This seems to be the meaning here.

That e'er this tongue of mine,
That laid the sentence of dread banishment
On yond proud man, should take it off again
With words of sooth! Shakespeare's Richard II.

TO SOOTH. v. a. [gerodian, Saxon.]

1. To flatter; to please with blandishment.

In soothing them, we nourish 'gainst our senate
The cockle of rebellion, infolence, sedition. Shak.
Can I sooth tyranny?

Seem pleas'd to see my royal master murder'd,
His crown usurp'd, a distaff in the throne? Dryd.
By his fair daughter is the chief confin'd,
Who sooths to dear delight his anxious mind;
Successful all her soft caresses prove,
To banish from his breast his country's love.

Thinks he that Memnon, soldier as he is,
Thoughtless and dull, will listen to his soothing? Rover.

I've tried the force of every reason on him,
Sooth'd and caress'd, been angry, sooth'd again;
Laid safety, life, and interest in his sight;
But all are vain, he scorns them all for Cato. Addison's Cato.

2. To calm; to soften; to mollify.

The beldame
Sooths her with blandishments, and frights with threats. Dryden.

3. To gratify; to please.

This calm'd his care, sooth'd with his future fame,

And pleas'd to hear his propagated name. Dryden.

SOOTHER. n. f. [from sooth.] A flatterer; one who gains by blandishments.

I cannot flatter: I defy

The tongues of soothers. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

TO SOOTHSAY. v. n. [sooth and say.] To predict; to foretell.

A damsel, possessed with a spirit of divination, met us, which brought her matters much gain by soothsaying. Acts, xvi.

SOOTHSAYER. n. f. [from soothsayer.] A foreteller; a predictor; a prognosticator.

Scarce was Mulidorus made partaker of this oft blinding light, when there were found numbers of soothsayers, who affirmed strange and incredible things should be performed by that child. Sidney.

A soothsayer bids you beware the ices of March.

He was animated to expect the papacy by the prediction of a soothsayer, that one should succeed Pope Leo, whose name should be Adrian, an aged man of mean birth, and of great learning and wisdom. Bacon's Henry VII.

SOOTINESS. n. f. [from sooty.] The quality of being sooty; fuliginousness.

SOOTY. adj. [from soot.]

1. Breeding soot.

'By fire of sooty coal th' alchymist turns Metals to gold.

2. Consisting of soot; fuliginous.

There may be some chymical way to defecate this oil, that it shall not spend into a sooty matter. W. Hunt.

3. Black; dark; dusky.

All the grisly legions that troop
Under the sooty flag of Acheron;
Hippies and hydas, and all monstrous forms. Milton.

Swift on his sooty pinions flits the gnome,
And in a vapour reach'd the gloomy dame. Pope.

TO SOOTY. [from soot.] To make black with soot.

Then (for his own weeds) shift and coat all rent,
Tann'd and all sooted with noisome smoke
She put him on; and over all a cloak. Chapman.

SOP. n. f. [rop, Saxon; sopa, Spanish; soppe, Dutch.]

1. Any thing steeped in liquor, commonly to be eaten.

The bounded waters
Would lift their bosoms higher than the shores,
And make a sop of all this solid globe. Shakespeare.
Draw, you rogue! for though it be night, yet the moon shines: I'll make a sop o' th' moonshine of you. Shakespeare.

Sops in wine, quantity for quantity, inebriate more than wine of itself. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Any thing given to pacify, from the sop given to Cerberus.

The prudent Sibyl had before prepar'd
A sop, in honey steep'd, to charm the guard;
Wh. mix'd with powerful drugs, she call before
His greedy ginning jaws, just op'd to rear. Dryd.
Ill nature is not cured with a sop, quarrelsome men, as well as quarrelsome curs, are worse for fair usage. L'Estrange.

To Cerberus they give a sop,
His tripple barking mouth to stop. Swift.

TO SOP. v. a. To steep in liquor.

SOP. n. f. [See SOAP.]

SOPH. n. f. [from sophista, Lat.] A young man who has been two years at the university.

Three Cambridge sophs and three pert templars came,

The same their talents, and their tastes the same;
Each prompt to query, answer, and debate,
And smit with love of poetry and prate. Pope's Dun.

SOPHI. n. f. [Persian.] The emperor of Persia.

By this scimitar

That slew the sophi and a Persian prince. Shakespeare.
A sig for the tulian and sophi. Congreve.

SOPHISM. n. f. [sophisma, Lat.] A fallacious argument; an unsound subtilty; a fallacy.

When a false argument puts on the appearance of a true one, then it is properly called a sophism or fallacy. Watts.

I, who as yet was never known to show
False piety to premeditated war,
Will graciously explain great nature's laws,
And hear thy sophisms in so plain a cause. Harris.

SOPHIST. n. f. [sophista, Lat.] A professor of philosophy.

The court of Cæsar is said to have been much resorted to by the sophists of Greece, in the happy beginning of his reign. Temple.

SOPHISTER. n. f. [sophiste, Fr. sophista, Latin.]

1. A disputant fallaciously subtle; an artful but insidious logician.

A subtle traitor needs no sophister.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.
If a heathen philosopher brings arguments from reason, which none of our sophistical sophisters can confute, for the immortality of the soul, I hope they will to weigh the consequences, as neither to talk nor live as if there was no such thing. Denb.
Not all the subtle objections of sophisters and rabbies, against the gospel, so much pre-aided the reception of it, as the repudiation of those crimes with which they aspersed the assemblies of christian. Regeur.

2. A professor of philosophy; a suphlist. This sense is antiquated.

At a time the sophists hath arguments to prove, that voluntary and extemporal far excelleth premeditated speech. Hooker.

SOPHISTICAL. adj. [sophistique, French, from sophist.] Fallaciously subtle; logically deceitful.

Neither know I whether I should prefer for mad-ness, and sophistical couzenage, that the same body of Christ should be in a thousand places at once of this sublunary world. Hall.

When the state of the controversy is well understood, the difficulty will not be great in giving answers to all his sophistical cavils. Stillingfleet.

That may form a demonstration for the present, which to posterity will appear a mere sophistical knot. More.

SOPHISTICALLY. adv. [from sophistical.] With fallacious subtilty.

Bolingbroke argues most sophistically. Swift.

TO SOPHISTICAL. v. a. [sophistiquer, Fr. from sophist.] To adulterate; to corrupt with something spurious.

If the passions of the mind be strong, they easily sophistate the understanding; they make it apt to believe upon every slender warrant, and to imagine infallible truth where scarce any probable show appeareth. Hooker.

Here's three of us are sophistated. Shakespeare.
Divers experiments succeeded not, because they were at one time tried with genuine materials, and at another time with sophistated ones. Boyle.

The only persons amongst the heathens, who sophistated nature and philosophy, were the stoicks; who affirmed a fatal, unchangeable concatenation of causes, reaching even to the dicte acts of man's will. South's Sermons.

Yet the rich culthes may their bustling spare;
They purchase but sophistated ware.

'Tis prodigality that buys deceit,
Where both the giver and the taker cheat. Dr. J.

The eye hath its coats and humours transparent and colour'd, lest it should tinge and sophistate the light that it lets in by a natural conduit. L'Estrange.

SOPHISTICATE. part. adj. [from the verb.] Adulterate; not genuine.

Wine sparkles brighter far in it,
'Tis pure and right, without deceit,
And that no woman e'er will let. Cowley.

Since then a great part of our scientific literature is most likely to be adulterate, though all be in the image and superscription of truth; the only way to know what is sophistate and what is not to, is to bring all to the examen of the touchstone. Glenn.

So truth, when only one supplied the state,
Grew scarce and dear, and yet sophistate. Dryden.

SOPHISTICATION. n. f. [sophistication, Fr. from sophistate.] Adulteration; not genuineness.

Sophistication is the act of counterfeiting or adulterating

nothing any thing with what is not so good, for the sake of unlawful gain.

The drugs and simples sold in shops generally are adulterated by the fraudulent wiles of the sellers, especially if the preciousness may make their sophistication very beneficial.

Besides easy submission to sophistications of sense, we have inability to prevent the misarrangements of our junior reason.

SOPHISTICATOR. n. f. [from sophisticate.] Adulterator; one that makes things not genuine.

SOPHISTRY. n. f. [from sophist.]

1. Fallacious ratiocination.

His sophistry prevailed, his father believed. Sid.
These men have obliterated and confounded the natures of things, by their false principles and wretched sophistry, though an act be never so sinful, they will strip it of its guilt.

2. Logical exercise.

The more youthful exercises of sophistry, theme and clamorations.

TO SOPORATE. v. n. [soporo, Lat.] To lay asleep.

SOPORIFEROUS. adj. [sopor and fero.]

SORCERER. n. f. [forcer, Fr. fortarius, low Latin.] A conjurer; an enchanter; a magician.

They say this town is full of conjurers. A nimble juggler that divides the senses, Dug working tricks that change the mind, Sorcery such as that deform the body, And many such like lies, time out of mind.

The weakness of the power of witch upon kings and magnates may be ascribed to the weakness of imagination, for it is hard for a witch or a forcer to put on a belief that they can hurt such.

He flew a table for our sakes, All sudden gnomes his, and dragons glare, And ten hundred fierces.

The Egyptian forcers contended with Moors, but the wonders which sole wrought out of the enchanted power of the forcers, is made the subject of a magic tale.

SORCERESS. n. f. [female of forcer.] A female magician; an enchantress.

But forth did forcers come, and to be born.

Diverse witches and forcers have fed man's faith, to and their imagination with high foul vapours.

The forcers that sat hall-way, and kept the fatal key, with ludicrous outcry rushed between.

How cunningly the forcers displays Her own transgressions, to upbraid me mine! Mil.
SORCEROUS. adj. Containing enchantments. A word not used.

Th' art enticing Circe's house, Where by her medicines, black and forcerous, Thy soldiers all are shut in well-arm'd flies, And turn'd to swine.

SORCERY. n. f. Magic; enchantment; conjuration; witchcraft; charms.

This witch Sycorax, For mischiefs manifold, and forceries terrible, Was banish'd.

Adders wisdom I have learn'd, To fence my ears against thy forceries.

SORDID. adj. [sordidus, Lat.]

1. Foul; gross; filthy, dirty.

There Charon stands, A sordid god; down from his hoary chin A length of beard descends, uncombed, unclean.

2. [sordide, French.] Intellectually dirty; mean; vile; base.

Thou canst not those exceptions make, Which vulgar sordid mortals take.

It is strange, since the priest's office heretofore was always splendid, that it is now looked upon as a piece of religion, to make it low and sordid.

3. [sordide, Fl.] Covetous; niggardly.

And yet not sordid, who rules gold.

One should be so to be generous and charitable, because another is sordid and ungrateful, it would be much in the power of vice to extinguish christian virtues.

SORDIDLY. adv. [from sordid] Meanly; poorly; covetously.

SORDIDNESS. n. f. [from sordid.]

1. Meanness; baseness.

I omit the madnesses of Caligula's delights, and the exorbitant sordidness or tholage of Tiberius.

2. Nastiness; not neatness.

Providence deter people from slothfulness and sordidness, and provokes them to cleanliness.

SORE. n. f. [Dan. saur, Danish.]

A place tender and painful; a place excoriated; an ulcer. It is not used of a wound, but of a breach of continuity, either long continued, or from internal cause. to be a sore, there must be an excoriation; a tumour or bruise is not called a sore before some disruption happens.

Let us hence provide A salve for any sore that may betide.

Receipt abound, but teaching all thy sore, The best is still at hand, to lance the sore, And cut the head, nor till the core be found.

The sore is a great gathering ground, By these all festering sores her counsels heal, Which time or has dulcified or shall reveal.

At length, considering all, his heart he cheer'd.

Lice and flies, which have a most wonderful instinct to find out convenient places for the hatching and nourishment of their young, lay their eggs upon sore.

SORE. adj. [from the noun.]

1. Tender to the touch. It has sometimes of before the causal noun.

We can ne'er be sure, Whether we pain or not endure; And just so far are sore and griev'd, As by the fancy is believ'd.

While sore of battle, while our wounds are green, Why should we tempt the doubtful day again?

It was a right answer of the physician to his patient, that had sore eyes. If you have more pleasure in the taste of wine than in the use of you.

fight, wine is good; but if the pleasure of being be greater to you than that of drinking, wine is naught.

2. Tender in the mind; easily vexed.

Malice and hatred are very fretting and vexatious, and apt to make our minds sore and uneasy, but he that can moderate these affections, will find ease in his mind.

Laugh at your friends; and, if your friends are sore, So much the better, you may laugh the more.

3. Violent with pain; afflictively vehement. See SORE, adverb.

Threescore and ten I can remember well, Within the volume of which time I've seen Hours dreadful and things strange; but this sore night

Hath trifled former knowings. I will persevere in my course of loyalty, though the conflict be sore between that and my blood.

My loins are filled with a sore distaste, and there is no whole part in my body.

Sore hath been their fight, As likeliest was, when two such foes met arm'd.

Gentle lady, may thy grave Peace and quiet ever have, After this day's travel, Sweet rest take thee even more.

They are determined to live up to the holy rule, though sore evils and great temporal inconvenience should attend the discharge of their duty.

4. Criminal. Out of use.

He this and that, and each man's blow Doth eye, defend, and shift, being laid to sore.

Though iron hew and mangle sore, Would wounds and bruises honour more.

Distrust shook sore their minds. So that, if Palamon were wounded sore, Arcite was hurt as much.

Sore sigh'd the knight, who this long sermon heard: At length, considering all, his heart he cheer'd.

At length, considering all, his heart he cheer'd.

At length, considering all, his heart he cheer'd.

At length, considering all, his heart he cheer'd.

At length, considering all, his heart he cheer'd.

At length, considering all, his heart he cheer'd.

At length, considering all, his heart he cheer'd.

At length, considering all, his heart he cheer'd.

At length, considering all, his heart he cheer'd.

How, Didius, shall a Roman, fore repuls'd,
Greet your arrival to this distant isle?
How bid you welcome to thrice shatter'd legions?
A. Philippi.

So'REHON. } n. f. [Irish and Scottish.] A SORN. } kind of arbitrary exaction or servile tenure, formerly in Scotland, as likewise in Ireland. Whenever a chieftain had a mind to revel, he came down among the tenants with his followers, by way of contempt called in the lowlands gileusfitts, and lived on free quarters; so that ever since, when a person obtrudes himself upon another, stays at his house, and hangs upon him for bed and board, he is said to sorn, or be a former. Macbrian.

They exact upon them all kinds of services;
yea, and the very wild exactions, coignies, livery, and forebon; by which they pull and wterly undo
the poor tenants and freeholders under them.
Spenser's Ireland.

So'REL n. f. [diminutive of fore.]

The buck is called the first year a fawn; the second, a pricket; the third, a forel. Shakespeare.

So'RRLY. adv. [from fore.]

1. With a great degree of pain or distress.
Here 's the smell of the blood still; all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand.
Oh! oh! oh!—What a high is there! the heart is fully overcharged. Shakespeare.

Of the warrior train,
Though most were forel wounded, none were slain.
Dryden.

2. With vehemence dangerous or afflictive.

I have done it,
Of which I do accuse myself forel,
That I will enjoy no more. Shakespeare.

So'RRLNESS. n. f. [from fore] Tenderness of a hurt

He that, whilst the forel of his late pangs of conscience remains, finds himself a little indisposed for sin, presently concludes repentance hath had its perfect work. Decay of Piety.

My foot began to swell, and the pain always, though it left such a forel, that I could hardly tuffer the cloths of my bed. Temple.

SORTICES. n. f. [from sortis.] Properly an heap. An argument where one proposition is accumulated on another.

Chrysippus the Stoick invented a kind of argument, consisting of more than three propositions, which is called sortes, or a heap. Dryden.

Sortes is when several middle terms are chosen to connect one another successively in several propositions, till the last proposition connects its predicate with the first subject. Thus, All men of revenge have their souls often uneasy; uneasy souls are a plague to themselves; now to be an 's own plague is folly in the extreme. Watts's Logic.

SORORICIDE. [from soror and cæde.] The murder of a sister.

oxalis, Latin.] This plant agrees with the dock in all its characters, and only differs in having an acid taste. Miller.

Of all roots of herbs the root of forel goeth the farthest into the earth. It is a cold and acid herb, that loveth the earth, and is not much drawn by the sun. Bacon.

Acid austere vegetables contract and strengthen the fibres, as all kinds of forel, the virtues of which lie in acid astringent salt, a sovereign antidote against the putrescent bilious alkali.

Arbutus not Aliments.

So'RRLY. adv. [from sorry.] Meanly; poorly; despicably; wretchedly; piti-ably.

Thy pipe, O Pau, shall help, though I sing for-rily. Sidney.

ness; wretchedness; pitiableness; despicableness.

So'RROW. n. f. [serg, Danish.] Grief; pain for something past; sadness; mourning.
Sorrow is not commonly understood as the effect of present evil, but of lost good.

Sorrow is uneasiness in the mind, upon the thought of a good lost, which might have been enjoyed longer; or the sense of a present evil. Locke.

Sorrow on thee, on all the pack or you,
That triumph thus upon my misery! Shak. Steers.
A world of woe and sorrow. Miln.

Some other hour I will to tears allow;
But, having you, can show no sorrow now. Dryd.

To So'RROW. v. n. [saurgan, Gothick; rongian, Saxon.] To grieve; to be sad; to be dejected.

The miserable change, now at my end,
Lament not sorrow at. Shak. Sp. Antony and Cleop.
Wherever sorrow is, relief would be;

If you do sorrow at my grief in love,
By giving love, you'll sorrow and my grief
Were both exterm'd. Shakespeare.

Now I rejoice, not that ye were made sorry, but that ye sorrowed to repentance. 2 Cor. vii. 9.

I neither fear to die, nor desire to live; and having mastered all grief in myself, I desire no man to sorrow for me. Hayward.

Send them forth, though sorrowing, yet in peace. Milton.

Sad the prince exploits
The neighb'ring main, and sorrowing treads the shores. Pope.

So'RROWED. adj. [from sorrow.] Accompanied with sorrow. Out of use.

Now the publick body, which doth seldom Play the seanter, feeling in itself
A lack of Timon's aid, hath sense withal
Of its own fall, restraining aid to Timon;
And sends forth us to make their sorrowed tender. Shakespeare.

So'RROWFUL. adj. [sorrow and full.]

1. Sad for something past; mournful; grieving.

Blessed are they which have been sorrowful to all thy sorgs; for they shall rejoice for thee, when they have seen all thy glory. Tob. xvi. 14.

2. Deeply serious. Not in use.

Hannah said, No, my lord, I am a woman of a sorrowful spirit: I have poured out my soul before the Lord. 1 Sam. i.

3. Expressing grief; accompanied with grief.

The things that my soul refused to touch, are as my sorrowful meat. Job, vi. 7.

So'RRY. adj. [sarig, Saxon.]

1. Grieved for something past. It is generally used of slight or casual miscarriages or vexations, but sometimes of greater things. It does not imply any long continuance of grief.

O, forget
What we are sorry for ourselves in thee.

The king was sorry; nevertheless, for the oath's sake, he commanded the Baptist's head to be given her. Matthew, xiv. 9.

I'm sorry for thee, friend; 'tis the duke's pleasure. Shakespeare.

We are sorry for the satire interspersed in some of these pieces, upon a few people, for whom the highest provocations have been received. Swift.

2. [from saur, filth, Islandick.] Vile; worthless; vexations.

How now, why do you keep alone?
Of sorry fancies your companions making,
Using those thoughts which the old indeed have died
With them they think on. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
If the union of the parts consist only in rest, it would seem that a bag of dust would be of as firm a consistence as that of marble; and Bajazet's cage had been but a sorry prison. Glanville.

Coarse complexions,
And cheeks of sorry grain, will serve to ply
The sampler, and to teize the housewife's wool. Milton.

How vain were all the ensigns of his power, that could not support him against one slighting look of a sorry slave. L'Estrange.

If this innocent had any relation to his Thebais, the poet might have found some sorry excuse for detaining the reader. Dryden.

If such a slight and sorry business as that could produce one organical body, one might reasonably expect, that now and then a solid lump of dough might be leavened into an animal. Bentley's Sermons.

SORT. n. f. [sorte, French.]

In dirt, and never saw the wonders of the deep.

Dryden.

Tell him that no history or antiquity can match his conduct; and presently the sor, because he knows neither history nor antiquity, shall begin to measure himself by himself, which is the only sure way for him not to fall short. South.

2. A wretch stupified by drinking.

Every sign

That calls the starting sor to nasty wine. Johnson.

A snail, a crab lord,

That chide and snaps her up at every word;

A brutal sor, who, while she holds his head,

With drunken silt bedaubed the nuptial bed.

Granville.

To SoT. v. a. To stupify; to besot; to infatuate.

I hate to see a brave bold fellow sorted,

Made four and senseless, turn'd to whey, by love;

A dwelling here, fit for a romance. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

The potion

Turns his brain, and stupifies his mind;

The sorted moon-calls gapes. Dryden.

To SoT. v. n. To tittle to stupidity.

SoTTISH. adj. [from sot.]

1. Dull; stupid; senseless; infatuate; doltish.

All's but naught;

Patience is sortish, and impatience does

Become a dog that's mad. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Upon the report of his approach, more than half fell away and dispersed; the residue, being more desperate or more sortish, did abide in the field, of whom many were slain. Hayward.

He gain'd a king

Ahaz his sortish conqueror. Milton.

'Tis sortish to offer at things that cannot be brought about. L'Estrange.

The inhabitants of Soudania in Africa are so sortish and grossly ignorant, that they differ very little from brutes. Wilkins.

How ignorant are sortish pretenders to astrology!

Swift.

2. Dull with intemperance.

SoTTISHLy. adv. [from sortish.] Stupidly; dully; senselessly.

Northumberland, sortishly mad with over great fortune, procured the king, by his letters patent under the great seal, to appoint the lady Jane to succeed him in the inheritance of the crown.

Hayward.

Atheism is impudent in pretending to philosophy; and superstitious sortishly ignorant, in fancying that the knowledge of nature tends to irreligion.

Glammill.

So sortishly to lose the purest pleasures and comforts of this world, and forego the expectation of immortality in another; and so desperately to run the risk of dwelling with everlasting burnings, plainly discovers itself to be the most pernicious folly and deplorable madness in the world. Bentley.

SoTTISHNESS. n. f. [from sortish.]

1. Dullness; stupidity; insensibility.

Sometimes phlegm putrifies into sortishness, sortishness into an ignorance or neglect of all religion. Holyday.

Few consider what a degree of sortishness and confirmed ignorance men may sin themselves into. South.

The first part of the text, the folly and sortishness of atheism, will come home to their case; since they make such a noisy pretence to wit and sagacity. Bentley.

2. Drunken stupidity.

No sober temperate person can look with an complacency upon the drunkenness and sortishness of his neighbour. South.

SoUCE. n. f. See SoUSE.

So'VEREIGN. adj. [sovereign, Fr. sevrain, Spanish.]

1. Supreme in power; having no superior.

As teaching bringeth us to know that God is our supreme truth; so prayer testifieth that we acknowledge him our sovereign good. Hooker.

You, my sovereign lady,

Causeless have laid disgraces on my head.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

None of us who now thy grace implore,

But held the rank of sovereign queen before;

Till giddy chance, whole malice never bears

That mortal bliss should last for length of years,

Cast us down headlong from our high estate. Dryden.

Whether Esau, then, were a assal to Jacob, and Jacob his sovereign prince by birthright, I leave the reader to judge. Locke.

2. Supremely efficacious; predominant over diseases.

A memorial of fidelity and zeal, a sovereign preservative of God's people from the venomous infection of heresy. Hooker.

The most sovereign prescription in Galen is but empirick; and, to this preservative, of no better report than a horse drench. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

Love-wounded Protheus,

My bosom, as a bed,

Shall lodge thee, till thy wound be thoroughly heal'd,

And thus I search it with a sovereign kiss. Shakespeare.

A water we call water of paradise, by that we do to it, is made very sovereign for health. Bacon.

Like the scum star'd men did draw

From parboil'd shoes and boots, and all the rest

Which were with any sovereign farness blest. Dryden.

Be cool, my friend, and hear my mute dispute

Some sovereign comforts drawn from common sense.

Dryden.

So'VEREIGN. n. f. Supreme lord.

O, let my sovereign turn away his face,

And bid his ears a little while be deaf. Shakespeare.

By my sovereign, and his fate, I swear,

Renown'd for faith in peace, for force in war,

Of our alliance other lands deserv'd. Dryden.

So'VEREIGNLY. adv. [from sovereign.]

Supremely; in the highest degree.

He was sovereignly lovely in himself. Boyle.

So'VEREIGNTY.

SO'VEIGNTY. n. f. [Sovereignty, Fr.]
Supremacy; highest place; supreme power; highest degree of excellence.

Give me pardon,
That I, your vassal, have employ'd and pain'd
Your unknown sovereignty. Shakespeare.

Happy were England, would this virtuous prince Take on his grace the sovereignty thereof. Shak.

To give laws unto a people, to institute magistrates and officers over them; to punish and pardon malefactors, to have the sole authority of making war and peace, are the true marks of sovereignty. Davies.

A mighty hunter thence he shall be fill'd
Before the Lord; as in despite of heav'n,
Or from heav'n, claiming second sovereignty. Milton.

Nothing does so gratify a haughty humour, as this piece of usurped sovereignty over our brethren.
Government of the Tongue.

Jove's own tree,
That holds the woods in awful sovereignty,
Requires a depth of lodging in the ground;
High as his topmost boughs to heav'n ascend,
So low his roots to hell's dominion tend. Dryden.

I well foresee, whene'er thy suit I grant,
That I my much-lov'd sovereignty shall want,
And her new beauty may thy heart invade. Dryd.
Let us above all things possess our souls with awful apprehensions of the majesty and sovereignty of God. Rogers.

Alexander's Grecian colonies in the Indies were almost exterminated by Sandrocottus; Seleucus recovered the sovereignty in some degree, but was forced to abandon to him the country along the Indus. Arbutnot on Coms.

SOUGH. n. f. [from sous, French.] A subterraneous drain.

Yet could not such mines, without great pains and charges, if at all, be r u h t, the delfs would be so flown with waters, it being impossible to make any adds or soughs to drain them, that no gins or machines could suffice to lay and keep them
dry. Ry on the Creation.

Another was found in sinking a sough-pit.
Wardward

SOUGHT. The preterite and participle pass. of seek.

I am sought of them that asked not for me.
I am found of them that sought me not. Isa. lxxv. 1.

SOUL. n. f. [sapel, Saxon; sael, Danish;
fuul, Islandick; siel, Dutch.]

1. The immaterial and immortal spirit of man.

When death was overcome, he opened heaven as well to the believing Gentiles as Jews: heaven till then was no receptacle to the souls of either. Hood.

Perhaps, for want of food, the soul may pine;
But that were strange, since all things bad and good,
Since all God's creatures mortal and divine,
Since God himself, is her eternal food. Davies.

He remembered them of the promises, seals, and oaths, which by publick authority had passed for concluding this marriage; that these, being religious bonds betwixt God and their souls, could not by any politic act of state be dissolved. Hayward.

So natural is the knowledge of the soul's immortality, and of some ubi for the future reception of it, that we find some tract or other of it in most barbarous nations. Huygn.

2. Intellectual principle.
Eloquence the soul, long charms the sense.

The eyes of our souls only then begin to see,
when our bodily eyes are closing. Law.

3. Vital principle.

Thou almost mak'st me waver in my faith,
To hold opinion with Pythagoras,
That souls of animals infuse themselves
Into the trunks of men. Shak. Merch. of Venice.
Thou sun, of this great world both eye and soul. Milton.

Join voices, all ye living souls! ye birds,
That singing up to heaven-gate ascend,
Bear on your wings, and in your notes, his praise. Milton.

In common discourse and writing we leave out the words vegetative, sensitive, and rational; and make the word soul serve for all these principles. Watts.

4. Spirit; essence; quintessence; principal part.

He has the very soul of bounty, Shakespeare.
Charity, the soul of all the rest. Milton.

5. Interior power.

There is some soul of goodness in things evil,
Would men observingly distill it out. Shakespeare.

6. A familiar appellation expressing the qualities of the mind.

Three wenches where I stood, cry'd,
"Alas, good soul!" Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
This is a poor mad soul; and she lays, up and down the town, that her eldest son is like you. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

The poor soul set singing by a lycamore tree,
Sing all a green willow:
Her hand on her bosom, her head on her knee. Shakespeare.

Keep the poor soul no longer in suspense,
Your charge is such as does not need detence. Dryden.

Unenlarged souls are disgusted with the wonders of the microscope, discovering animals which equal not a peppercorn. Watts.

7. Human being.

The moral is the case of every soul of us. L'Estr.
It is a republick; there are in it a hundred bourgeois, and about a thousand souls. Addison's Italy.
My state of health none care to learn;
My life is here no soul's concern. Swift.

8. Active power.

Earth, air, and seas through empty space would rowl,
And heav'n would fly before the driving soul. Dryden.

9. Spirit; fire; grandeur of mind.

That he wants caution, he must need confess;
But not a soul, to give our arms success. Young.

10. Intelligent being in general.

Every soul in heav'n shall bend the knee. Milton.

SOUL'DIER. See SOLDIER.

SOUL'ED. adj. [from soul.] Furnished with mind.

Gripping, and still tenacious of thy hold, Wouldst thou the Grecian chiefs, though largely soul'd,
Should give the prizes they had gained before? Dryden.

SOUL'LESS. adj. [from soul.] Mean; low;
spiritless.

Slave, soulless villain, dog, O rarely base! Shak.

SOUL'SHOT. n. f. [soul and shot.] Something paid for a soul's requiem among the Romanists.

In the Saxon times there was a funeral duty to be paid, called peccunia sepulchralis & symbolon
animæ, and in Saxon soulshot. Ayliffe's Parergon.

SOUND. adj. [rumb, Saxon.]

1. Healthy; hearty; not morbid; not diseased; not hurt.

I am fall'n out with my more headier will,
To take the indispos'd and sickly fit
For the sound man. Shakespeare's King Lear.
He hath a heart as sound as a bell, and his tongue is the clapper; for what his heart thinks, his tongue speaks. Shakespeare.

He hath received him safe and sound
Luke, xv. 27.

We can preserve
Unhurt our minds, and understanding sound. Milt.

The king visits all around,
Comforts the sick, congratulates the sound;
Honours the princely chiefs. Dryden.

But Cypys, and the rest of sounder mind,
The fatal present to the flames design'd,
Or to the deep. Dryden.

When a word which originally signifies a particular object, is a tribute to several other jects, on account of some evident resemblance or relation to the original idea, this is peculiarly called an analogical word; so a sound or healthy pulse, a sound digestion, sound sleep, are all so called, with reference to a sound and healthy constitution; but if you speak of sound doctrine, or sound speech, this is by way of resemblance to health, and the words are metaphorical. Watts's Logic.

2. Right; not erroneous; orthodox.

Whom although to know he life, and joy to make mention of his name; yet our soundest knowledge is to know that we know him not as indeed he is, neither can know him, and our safest eloquence concerning him is silence. Hobbs.
Let my heart be sound in thy statutes. Psalms cxix. 80.

Sound, and yet not trivial, catechetick institution.
The rules are sound and useful, and may serve your devotion. Felton.

3. Stout; strong; lusty.

The men are very strong and able of body; and therefore either give sound strokes with their clubs wherewith they fight, or else shoot strong flours with their bows. Abbot.

4. Valid; not failing.

They reserved their titles, tenures, and signiorias whole and sound to themselves. Spenser's Ireland.

5. Fast; hearty. It is applied to sleep.

New wak'd from soundest sleep,
Soft on the flow'ry herb I found me laid In balmy sweat. Milton's Paradise Lost.

SOUND. adv. Soundly; heartily; completely fast.

The messenger approaching to him spake,
But his waste words return'd to him in vain;
So sound he slept that night might him awake. Fairy Queen.

SOUND. n. f. [sunde, French.] A shallow sea, such as may be founded.

The sound of Denmark, where ships pay toll. Carriden.

Behold I come, sent from the Stygian sounds,
As a dire vapour that has cleav'd the ground,
T'ingender with the night, and blast the day. Ben Jonson.

Him young Thoos bore, the bright increase
Of Phorcy, dreadet in the sounds and seas. Pope.

SOUND. n. f. [sunde, French.] A probe, An instrument used by chirurgeons to feel what is out of reach of the fingers.

The patient being laid in a table, puts the sound
till it meet with some resistance. Sharp's Surgery.

To SOUND. v. a.

1. To search with a plummet; to try depth.

In this secret there is a gulf, which while we live we shall never sound. Hobbs.

You are, Hastings, much too shallow
To sound the bottom of the after-times. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

2. To try; to examine.

Has he never before sounded you in this business? Shakespeare.
Invites these lords, and those he meant to sound. Daniel.

I was in jest,
And by that offer meant to sound your breast. Dryden.

I've sounded my Nutmegs, man by man,
And find 'em ripe for a revolt. Addison's Cato.

To SOUND. v. n. To try with the sounding-line.

The shipmen decreed that they drew near to some country, and sounded it twenty fathoms. Acts, xxvii.

Beyond

Beyond this we have no more a positive distinct notion of infinite space than a mariner has of the depth of the sea, where having let down a large portion of his sounding line, he reaches no bottom. Locke.

SOUND. n. f. [sipta, Lat.] The cuttle-fish. Ainsworth.

SOUND. n. f. [son, French; sonus, Latin.] 1. Any thing audible; a noise; that which is perceived by the ear.

Heaps of bus' words upbraid'd hideously
With hollow sound, though having little sense,
And thereby winning due intelligence,
Have marr'd the face of goodly poetry,
And made a moon let of their fantasy. Spenser.
Come, sisters, cheer us up his sprights,
And shew the best of our delights;
I'll charm the air to give a sound,
While you perform your antick round.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Dash a stone against a stone in the bottom of the water, and it maketh a sound, to a long pole struck upon gravel, in the bottom of the water, maketh a sound. Bacon's Natural History.

The warlike sound of trumpet loud. Milton.
Where'er he spoke, his voice was heard around,
Loud as a trumpet with a silver sound. Dryden.
That which is conveyed into the brain by the ear is called sound, though, till it effect the perceptive part, it be nothing but motion. Locke.

2. Mere empty noise opposed to meaning.
He contented himself with doubtful and general terms, which might make no ill sound in men's ears. Locke.

Let us consider this proposition as to its meaning; for it is the sense and not sound that must be the principle. Locke.

O livish land! for sound at such expense?
But then she flies it in her bills for sense. Young.

TO SOUND. v. n.

1. To make a noise; to emit a noise.
Trumpet once more to sound at general doom. Milton.

That with one blast through the whole house does bound,
And first taught speaking trumpets how to sound. Dryden.

Thither the silver sounding lyres
Shall call the smiling loves and young desires. Pope.

2. To exhibit by sound, or likeness of sound.

Why do you start and seem to fear?

Thou'st that do'st sound so true? Shakespeare.

They being told there was small hope of ease

To be expected to the evils from hence,

Were willing at the first to give an ear

To any thing that at random cur'd. B. f. n. Catil.

This relation found rather like a chymical dream than a philosophical truth. Waller's Maccabees, May.

3. To be conveyed in sound.
From you found out the word is the Lord. Thess. i. 8.

SO SOUND. v. a.

1. To cause to make a noise; to play on.
And many nymphs about them flocking round,
And many tuns which their horns did found. Spenser.

Michael bid found

Th' archangel trumpet. Milton.

Milvius lay; and to reason'd

The warrior trumpet; and to add to found;

With breathing brass to make fierce alarms,

And route to dare their fate in honourable arms. Dryden.

2. To betoken or direct by a sound.

Once found from Ida did both hosts survey,

And, when he pleas'd to thunder, part the rays;

Here found in rain that kind retreat should found;

The cannon had the thunder drown'd. Waller.

3. To celebrate by sound.
Sun, found his praise. Milton.

SO'UNDBOARD. n. f. [sound and board.]
A board which propagates the sound in organs.

Try it without any soundboard along, only hirpwise at one end of the string. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

As in an organ, from one blast of wind,

To many a row of pipes the soundboard breathes. Milton.

SO'UNDING. adj. [from sound.] Sonorous; having a magnificent sound.

Obsolete words may then be revived, when more sounding or more significant than those in practice. Dryden.

SO'UNDLY. adv. [from sound.]

1. Healthily; heartily.

2. Lustily; stoutly; strongly.

When Duncan is asleep,

Whereto the rather shall this hard day's journey

Sandy invite him. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

They did ply

My feet and hands with cords, and to the mast

With other hallets made me soundly fast. Chapman's Odyssey.

Who had so often in your aid

So many ways been soundly paid. Hudibras.

Have no common

Provided Punch, for there's the jest,

Be soundly maul'd, and plague the rest. Swift.

Their nobility and gentry are one half ruined, banished, or converted; they all soundly feel the smart of the last Irish war. Swift.

3. Truly; rightly.

The wisest are always the readiest to acknowledge, that soundly to judge of a law is the weightiest tongue which any man can take upon him. Hooker.

The doctrine of the church of England, expressed in the thirty-nine articles, is to soundly and orthodoxly settled, as cannot be questioned without extreme danger to our religion. Bacon.

4. Fast; closely: it is used of sleeping.

Now when that idle dream was to him brought,

Unto that elven knight he had him fly,

Where he slept soundly, void of evil thought. Fairy Queen.

When the succession of ideas ceases, our perception of duration ceases with it, which every one experiences while he sleeps soundly. Locke.

SO'UNDLESS. n. f. [from sound.]

1. Health; honesty.

I would I had that corporal soundness now,

As when thy father and myself in friendship

First tried our soldier'ship. Shakespeare.

2. Truth; rectitude; incorrupt state.

In the end, very few excepted, all became subject to the sway of time: other odds there was none amongst them, saving only that some fell sooner away, and some later, from the soundness of belief. Hooker.

I esly is misled in his politics; but he hath given proof of his soundness in religion. Swift.

As the health and strength, or weakness, of our bodies, is very much owing to their methods of treating us when we were young; so the soundness or folly of our minds is not less owing to those first tempers and ways of thinking, which we ca-reguly received from the love, tenderness, authority, and constant conversation of our mothers. Lew.

3. Strength; solidity.

This presuppos'd, it may stand then very well with strength and soundness of reason, even tho' to answer. Hooker.

SOUR. n. f. [soupe, Fr.] Strong decoction of flesh for the table.

Spongy morrels in strong ragouts are sour,

And in the soup the slimy snail is drown'd. Gay's Trivia.

Let the cook daub the back of the footman's new liver; or, when he is going up with a dish of soup, let her follow him softly with a ladle full. Swift.

SOUR. adj. [from sour, Saxon; sar, Welsh.]

1. Acid; austere; pungent on the palate with astringency, as vinegar, or unripe fruit.

All sour things, as vinegar, provoke appetite. Bacon.

Their drink is sour. Hes. iv. 18.

But let the bounds of licencies be fix'd,

Not things of disagreeing nature mix'd,

Not sweet with sour, nor birds with serpents join'd. Dryden.

Both ways deceitful is the wine of pow'r;

When new 'tis heady, and when old 'tis sour. Harte.

2. Harsh of temper; crabbed; peevish;
morose; severe.

He was a scholar,

Lofy and sour to them that lov'd him not. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

A man of pleasant and popular conversation, rather free than sour and reserved. Wotton's Life of Buckingham.

Tiberius, otherwise a very sour man, would punctually perform this rite unto others, and expect the same. Brown.

3. Afflictive; painful.

Let me embrace those sour adversities;

For wite men lay it is the wisest course. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

4. Expressing discontent.

He laid a sour thing to Laura the other day. Taylor.

Sullen and sour, with discontented mien

Jocasta frown'd. Pope.

The lord treasurer often looked on me with a sour countenance. Swift.

SOUR. n. f. [from the adjective.] Acid substance.

A thousand sours to temper with one sweet,

To make it seem more dear and dainty. Spenser.

TO SOUR. v. a.

1. To make acid.

His angelick nature had none of that carnal leven which ferments to the souring of ours. Decay of Piety.

Thus kneaded up with milk, the new made man

His kingdom o'er his kindred would began;

Till knowledge misapplied, misunderstood,

And pride of empire, sour'd his baimy blood. Dryden.

One passion, with a different turn,

Makes wit inflame or anger burn:

So the sun's heat, with diff'rent pow'rs,

Ripens the grape, the liquor sours. Swift.

2. To be harsh, or seem unkindly.

Tufts of grass sour land. Milton's Hymn.

3. To make uneasy; to make less pleasing.

Hail, great king!

To sour your happiness, I must report

The queen is dead. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

and hinder the hatred of vice from souring into severity. Addison.

If I turn my eyes from them, or seem displeased,

they sour upon it. Spenser.

SOURCE. n. f. [source, French.]

1. Spring; fountain; bead.

Kings that rule

Behind the hidden sources of the Nile. Addis. Cato.

2. Original; first cause.

This second source of men, while yet but few,
With some regard to what is just and right Shall lead their lives. Milton's Paradise Lost.

This is the true source and original of this mischief. South.

Of himself is none;

But that eternal Infinite, and One,
Who never did begin, who ne'er can end,
On him all beings, as their source, depend. Dryd.

3. First producer.

Famous Greece,
That source of art and cultivated thought,
Whence they to Rome, and Romans hither, brought. Waller.

SO'URDET. n. f. [from sourd, Fr.] The little pipe of a trumpet.

SOU'RISH. adj. [from sour.] Somewhat sour.

By distillation we obtain a sourish spirit, which will dissolve coral. Boyle.

Then sourly smil'd. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

SO'URNES. n. f. [from sour.]

1. Acidity; austereness of taste.

Sourness consisteth in some grossness of the body; and incorporation doth make the mixture of the body more equal, which induceth a milder taste. Bacon's Natural History.

I th' spring, like youth, it yields an acid taste;
But summer dail, like age, the journeys waste. Denham.

He knew

For fruit the grafted pear-tree to dispose,
And tame to plumbs the journeys of the floss. Dryden's Virgil.

Of acid or four one has a notion from taste,
sourness being one of those simple ideas which one cannot describe. Arbutnot.

Has life no journeys, drawn so near its end? Pope.

2. Asperity; harshness of temper.

Pelagius caped at the curious neatness of men's apparel in those days, and, through the journeys of his disposition, spoke somewhat too hardly thereon. Hick.

He was never thought to be of that superstitious journeys, which some men pretend to in religion. King Charles.

Her religion is equally free from the weakness of superstition and the journeys of enthusiasm: it is not of an uncomfortable melancholy nature. Addison's Freeholder.

Take care that no journeys and moroseness mingle with our serious train of mind. Alf.

SO'USSOP. n. f. [guanabanas, Lat.] Custard-apple.

Only, though it sink, they drop by drop impart;
But souse the cabbage with a boisterous heart. Pope.

2. To throw into water. A ludicrous sense.

They soused me into the Thames with as little remorse as they drown blind puppies. Shakespeare.

VOL. II.

Who those were that run away,
And yet gave out th' had won the day;
Although the rabble soused them for 't
O'er head and ears in mud and dirt. Butler.

They soused me over head and ears in water when a boy, so that I am now one of the most case-hardened of the Ironsides. Addis. Cato.

TO SOUSE. v. n. [Of this word I know not the original: it must come from sous, or dessous, down, Fr.] To fall as a bird on its prey.

Thus on some filly, swan, or tim'rous hare,
Jove's bird comes soufing down from upper air;
Her crooked talons seize the fearful prey,
Then out of sight she soars. Dryden's Æneid.

Jove's bird will souse upon the tim'rous hare,
And tender kids with his sharp talons tear. Dryden Jan.

TO SOUSE. v. a. To strike with sudden violence, as a bird strikes his prey.

The gallant monarch is in aims;
And like an eagle o'er his airy tow'rs,
To souse annoyance that comes near his nest. Shak.

SOUSE. adv. With sudden violence. A low word.

Such make a private study of the street,
And, looking toll at every man they meet,
Run souse against his chair, who stands amaz'd,
To find they did not see, but only gaz'd. Young.

SO'UTERRAIN. n. f. [souterrain, Fr.] A grotto or cavern in the ground. Not English.

Defences against extremities of heat, as shade, grottoes, or souterrains, are necessary preservatives of health. Arbutnot.

SOUTH. n. f. [ruð, Saxon; suud, Dutch; sud, French.]

1. The part where the sun is to us at noon: opposed to north.

East and west have no certain points of heaven, but north and south are fixed; and seldom the far southern people have invaded the northern, but contrariwise. Bacon.

2. The southern regions of the globe.

The queen of the south. Bible.

From the north to call

Decrepit winter, from the south to bring Solstitial summer's heat. Milton.

Such fruits as you appoint for long keeping, gather in a fair and dry day, and when the wind bloweth not south. Bacon.

SOUTHEAST. n. f. [south and east.] The point between the east and south; the point of winter sunrise.

The planting of trees warm upon a wall against the south or southeast sun, doth hasten their ripening. Bacon.

The three seas of Italy, the Inferiour towards the southeast, the Iunior towards the south, and the Adriatick on the northeast side, were commanded by three different nations. Arbutnot.

SO'UTHERLY. adj. [from south.]

1. Belonging to any of the points denominated from the south; not absolutely southern.

2. Lying towards the south.

Unto such as live under the pole, that is only north which is above them, that is only southerly which is below them. Bacon.

Two other country bills give us a view of the most easterly, westerly, and southerly parts of England. Graunt.

3. Coming from about the south.

I am but mad north, northw'rd; when the wind is southerly, I know a hawk from a hand-saw. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

SO'UTHERN. adj. [ruðerne, Saxon; from south.]

1. Belonging to the south; meridional.

Frowning Austria looks the southern sphere,
And rots with envious rain th' unwholesome year. Dryden.

2. Lying towards the south.

Why mourn I not for thee,
And with the southern clouds contend in tears? Shakespeare's Henry VI.

3. Coming from the south.

I will conduct thee on thy way,
When next the southing sun inflames the day. Dryden.

SO'UTHING. n. f. Tendency to the south

Not far from hence, if I observ'd aright
The southing of the stars and polar light, Sicilia lies. Dryden's Æneid.

SO'UTHMOST. adj. [from south.] Furthest toward the south.

Next Chemus, th' obscure dread of Moab's sons,
From Aram to Neho, and the wild
Of southmost Aburim. Milton.

SO'UTHSAY. n. f. [properly soothsay.] Prediction.

All these were idle thoughts and fantasies,
Devices, dreams, opinions unfound,
Shews, visions, soothsaying, and prophecies,
And all that reigned is, as feelings, tales, and lies. Fanny Queen.

TO SO'UTHSAY. v. n. [See SOOTHSAI.] To predict.

Young men, hovering between hope and fear might easily be carried into the superstition of sooth saying by names. Cumt'n.

SO'UTHSAYER. n. f. [properly soothsayer.] See SOOTHSAI. A predictor.

SO'UTHWARD. n. f. The southern regions

Countries are more fruitful to the southward than in the northern parts. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

SO'UTHWARD. adv. [from south.] To-wards the south.

A prisoner in a room twenty foot square, is at liberty to walk twenty foot southward, but not northward. Locke.

Every life from the dreary months
Flies confused southward. Thompson's Winter.

SOUTHWEST. n. f. [south and west.] Point between the south and west; winter sun set.

Phœnce is an haven of Crete, and lieth toward the southwest. Acts. xxvii. 12.

The planting of trees warm upon a wall against the south or southwest sun, doth hasten their coming on and ripening, and the southeast is found to be better than the southwest, though the southeast be the hotter coast. Bacon's Natural History.

SOUFENANCE. n. f. [French.] Remembrance; memory. A French word which, with many more, is now happily disused.

If thou wilt renounce thy misdeeds,
Life will I grant thee for thy valiance,
And all thy wrongs will wipe out of my soufenance.

Gave wound a great countenance to the knight,
That of his way he had no soufenance,
No act of vengeance.

SOW. n. f. [Frug., Sax. soeg, soave, Dutch.]

1. A female pig, the female of a boar.

Boars have great lugs, sow much less.

A sow beneath an oak shall I alone,

All white here I, and white be thirty young.

For which they scorn and hate them worse

Than dogs and cats do sow geese. H. d. lras.

The sow ye den's horn has something musical in it, but this is seldom heard. Addison's Spectator.

2. Perhaps from sow might come sow.

sowen, juwine; ypina, Saxon.

And wait thou tain

To hovel thee with sowen, and ypina.

plant.

TO SOW. v. n. [solan, Gothick; rapan,

Saxon; sagen, Dutch.] To scatter seed

in order to a harvest.

The one belongeth unto them that seek, the other unto them that have found happiness: they that pray do but yet sow, they that give thanks declare they have reaped. Hooker.

They that sow in tears shall reap in joy.

Hi that soweth to his flesh, shall reap corruption; but he that soweth to the spirit, shall reap life everlasting. Gal. vi. 8.

Sow to yourselves in righteousness, and reap in mercy. Hof.

TO SOW. v. a. part. pass. sown.

1. To scatter in the ground, in order to growth; to propagate by seed.

Like was not to be found,

Sown in that soil where all good things did grow,

And freely sprung out of the fruitful ground

A ripened nature did them sow. Fairy Queen.

From Ireland come I with my strength,

And reap the harvest which that rascal sow'd.

I sow my law in you, and it shall bring fruit in many plants which grow in the hotter countries, being sown in the colder, will being sown of seed-late in the spring, and abide most part of the summer. Bacon.

When to turn

The fruitful soil, and when to sow the corn,

I King, Meccenas. Dryden's George, 42.

The proud mother views her precious brood,

And happy brain lies, which she never sow'd.

2. To spread; to propagate.

Forwardness is in him, but he devoteth himself entirely, he soweth a field. Prov. vi. 14.

To sow a jangling noise of words unknown.

3. To impregnate or stock with seed.

He shall give the rain of thy seed, that thou shalt sow the ground withal. Isaiah, xxx. 23.

The intellectual faculty is a goodly field, capable of great improvement; and it is the worst husbandry in the world to sow it with trifles or impertinencies. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

4. To besprinkle.

He sow'd with stars the heav'n, thick as a field.

Morn new sow'd the earth with orient pearl.

TO SOW. v. a. [for sow.] To join by needlework.

Sow tree, whose broad smooth leaves together

And girded on, may cover round.

ears. Shakespeare.

SOWN. The participle of sow. It is used barbarously by Swift for sowed.

A goodly country, naturally beautified with roses,

sown with pease. Heylyn.

An hundred and fifty of their beds, sown together, made up the breadth and length. Cutler.

SO'WTHIST. n. f. [sonchius, Latin.] A weed.

Sowthistles though conys eat, yet sheep and cattle will not touch; the milk of which, rubbed on warts, weareth them away, which sheweth it is corrosive. Bacon.

SPAAD. n. f. [stella terra, Lat.] A kind of mineral.

English talc, of which the coarser sort is called plaitter; the finer, spaad, earth-flax, or salaman-der's hair. Woodward.

SPACE. n. f. [spatium, Latin.]

1. Room; local extension.

Space is the relation of distance between any two bodies or points. Locke.

Oh undistinguish'd space of woman's wit! Shak.

This which yields or fills all space. Milton.

Pure space is capable neither of resistance nor motion. Locke.

Space and motion can never be actually infinite:

they have a power only and a capacity of being increased without end: so that no space can be divided into parts, but still a larger may be imagined;

no motion so swift or languid, but a greater velocity or slowness may still be conceived. Bentley.

2. Any quantity of place.

I would not be the villain that thou think'st

For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,

And the rich east to boot. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

There was but two ways to escape; the one through the woods, about ten miles space to Walpo.

Kneller.

In such a great ruin, where the fragments are great and hard, it is not possible they should be so adjusted in their fall, but that they would lie hollow, and many unfilled spaces would be intercepted amongst them. Burnet.

Measuring first with careful eyes

The space his spear could reach, aloud he cries. Dry.

3. Quantity of time.

There is a competent time allowed every man;

and, as it is certain death is the conclusion of it,

'tis possible some space before death. Harriard.

Nine times the space that measures day and night

To mortal men, he with his horrid crew

Lay vanquish'd, rolling in the fiery gulph,

Confounded, though immortal. Milton.

In a lever the motion can be continued only for so short a space, as may be answerable to that little distance betwixt the fulcrum and the weight.

Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

God may defer his judgments for a time, and give a people a longer space of repentance: he may stay till the iniquities of a nation be full; but sooner or later they have reason to expect his vengeance. Tillotson.

The lives of great men cannot be writ with any tolerable degree of elegance or exactness, within a short space after their decease. Addison's Freeholder.

4. A small time; a while.

Sith for me ye fight, to me this grace

Both yield, to stay your deadly strife a space.

Fairy Queen.

Compassion quell'd

His best of man, and gave him up to tears

A space, till firmer thoughts restrain'd excess. Milt.

SPACIOUS. adj. [spacius, French; spa- tiosus, Lat.] Wide; extensive; roomy;

not narrow.

The former buildings, which were but mean,

contented them not; spacious and ample churches

they erected throughout every city. Hooker.

Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty;

And yet seem cold. Shakespeare.

Merab with spacious beauty fills the fight,

But too much awe chills'd the bold delight. Cowley.

Like an English gen'l will I die,

And all the spacious make my spacious grave:

Women and cowards on the land may lie;

The sea's a tomb that's proper for the brave. Dry.

SPACIOUSLY. adv. [from spacious.] Extensively.

SPACIOUSNESS. n. f. [from spacious.]

Roominess; wide extension.

SPADLE. n. f. [diminutive of spade.] A little spade.

Others destroy moles with a spadde, waiting in the mornings and evenings for them.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

SPADE. n. f. [spad, Sax. spade, Islandick and Dutch.]

1. The instrument of digging.

Take the an of the earth new turned up, by digging with the spade, or standing by him that diggeth. Bacon.

Many learned men affirm, that some nations have been eat through by the sea, and others cut by the spade. Brown.

His next advance was to the soldier's trade,

Where, if he did not nimble ply the spade,

His surly officer ne'er fail'd to crack

His knotty cudgel on his tougher back. Dryden.

Here nature never did fence made

Between the sceptre and the spade. Swift.

2. A deer three years old. Ainsworth.

3. A suit of cards.

SPADEBONE. n. f. [named from the form.]

The shoulder-blade.

par'd,

Which usually they boil, the spade-bone being bar'd.

Dryden.

SPADICEOUS. adj. [spadiceus, Lat.]

Of those five Scaliger beheld, though one was

spadiceus, or of a light red, and two inclining to red, yet was there not any of this complexion among them. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SPADILLE.

SPADILLE. n. f. [spadille, or espadille, Fr.] The ace of spades at ombre.

SPAGYRICK. adj. [spagyricus, Lat.] A word coined by Paracelsus from spaber, a searcher, Teutonick.] Chymical.

SPAGYRIST. n. f. A chymist.
This change is so unexampled, that though among the more curious spagyrist it be very well known, yet many naturalists cannot easily believe it. Boyle.

SPAKE. The old preterite of speak.
So spake th' archangel Michael, then paus'd. Milton.

SPALL. n. f. [espaule, Fr.] Shoulder.
Out of use.

Their mighty strokes their habergions dismay'd,
And naked made each other's manly spalls. Fairf.
SPALT or Spelt. n. f. A white, scaly, shining stone, frequently used to promote the fusion of metals. Bailey.

SPAN. n. f. [rpan, rponne, Saxon; spanna, Ital. span, Dutch.] Perhaps originally the expansion of the hand.]

1. The space from the end of the thumb to the end of the little finger extended; nine inches.

A foot, the length of it, is a sixth part of the fathom; a span, one eighth; a palm, or hand's breadth, one twenty-fourth; a thumb's breadth, or inch, one seventy-second; and a forefinger's breadth, one ninety-sixth. Holder on Time.

Will you with counters sum
The vast proportion of his infinite,
And buckle in a waste most fathomless
With spans and inches so diminutive
A fears and reasons? Shak. Troilus and Cressida.

Sum how brief the life of man
Runs his erring pilgrimage,
That the stretching of a span
Buckles in his sum of age. Shakespeare.
When I removed the one, although but at the distance of a span, the other would stand like Hercules's pillar. Brown.

2. Any short duration.
You have scarce time
To steal from spiritual leisure a brief span,
To keep your earthly audit. Shak. Henry VIII.
The virgin's part, the mother, and the wife,
So well she acted in this span of life. Waller.
Then conscience, unrestrain'd by fears, began
To stretch her limits, and extend the span. Dryd.
Life's but a span, I'll every inch enjoy. Farquhar.

To SPAN. v. a.

1. To measure by the hand extended.
Oft on the well-known spot I fix my eyes,
And span the distance that between us lies. Tickel.

2. To measure.
My surveyor is false; the o'er-great cardinal
Hath shew'd him gold; my life is spann'd already. Shakespeare.
This foul doth span the world, and hang content
From either pole unto the centre;
Where in each room of the well-furnish'd tent
He lies warm, and without adventure. Herbert.
Harry, whose tuneful and well-measur'd song
First taught our English musick how to span
Words with just note and accent, not to lean
With Midas' ears, counting short and long. Milt.

SPAN. The preterite of spin. See SPIN.
Together furiously they ran,
That to the ground came horse and man;
The blood out of their helmets span,
So sharp were their encounters. Dryden's Nymphid.

SPAN-COUNTER. n. f. [from span, count, and farthing.]

A play at which money is thrown within a span or mark.

Tell the king, that for his father's sake, Henry V.
in whose time boys went to span-counter for French crowns, I am content he shall reign. Shak. Hen. VI.

Boys shall not play
At span-counter or blowpoint, but shall pay.
Toll to some courtier.
His chief solace is to steal down, and play at span-farthing with the page. Donna.

To SPANE. v. a. To wean a child.
SPANG. n. f. [spange, Dutch.] This word seems to have signified a cluster of shining bodies.

The colours that shew best by candlelight are white, carnation, and a kind of sea-water green; and ouches or spangs, as they are of no great count, to they are of most glory. Bacon.

SPAN-CL. n. f. [spange, German, a buckle, a locket; whence oberr spangen, car-rings.]

1. A small plate or boss of shining metal.
2. Any thing sparkling and shining.

As hoary frost with spangles doth attire
The mossy branches of an oak half dead. Fairy Q.
Thus in a starry night fond children cry
For the rich spangles that adorn the sky. Waller.

The twinkling spangles, the ornaments of the upper world, lose their beauty and magnificence; vulgar spectators see them but as a confused huddle of petty illuminants. Glaucide.
That now the dew with spangles deck'd the ground,
A sweeter spot of earth was never found. Dryden.

To SPAN-GL. v. a. [from the noun.]
To besprinkle with spangles or shining bodies.

They never meet in grove or green,
By fountain clear, or spangled starlight shewn. Shak.
What stars do spangle heaven with such beauty,
As those two eyes become that heavenly face. Shak.
Unpin that spangled breastplate which you wear,
That th' eyes of busy fools may be kept there. Donne.

Four faces each
Had, like a double Janus; all their shape
Spangled with eyes, more numerous than those Of Argus. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Then appear'd
Spangling the hen sphere, then first adorn'd
With the bright luminaries, that set and rose. Milt.
He cuts out a silk mantle from the skies,
Where the most sprightly azure pleas'd the eyes,
Thus he with stary vapours spangles all,
Look in their prime, ere they grow, rise, and fall. Cowley.

The spacious firmament on high,
With all the blue etherial sky,
And spangled heav'n, a shining frame,
Their great Original proclaim. Addison.

SPANIEL. n. f. [spaniolus, Lat. espagneul, French.]

1. A dog used for sports in the field, remarkable for sagacity and obedience.
Divers days I followed his steps till I found him, having newly met with an excellent spaniel belonging to his dead companion. Sidney.
There are arts to reclaim the wildest men, as there are to make spaniels fetch and carry a child 'em often, and feed 'em seldom. Dryden's Spanish Fly.

2. A low, mean, sneaking fellow; a courtier; a dedicatior; a pensioner; a dependant; a placeman.

I mean sweet words,
Low crooked courtesies, and base spaniel fawning. Shakespeare.
I am your spaniel; and, Demetrius,
The more you beat me I will fawn on you. Shak.

To SPANIEL. v. n. [from the noun.] To fawn; to play the spaniel.

SPANISH Broom. n. f. [genista juncea, Lat.] A plant so called, as being a native of Spain. Miller.

A special idea is called by the schools a species.

2. Particular; peculiar.

Most commonly with a certain special grace of her own, wagging her lips, and grinning instead of smiling. Bulmy.

The several books of scripture having had each some several occasion and particular purpose which caused them to be written, the contents thereof are according to the exigence of that special end whereunto they are intended. Hooker.

Of all men alive,
I never yet beheld that special sage,
Which I could fancy more than any other. Shakespeare.

'Nought so vile that on the earth doth live,
But to the earth some special good doth give. Shak.

The fourth commandment, in respect of any one definite and special day of every week, was not simply and perpetually moral. White.

Our Saviour is represented every where in scripture as the special patron of the poor and the afflicted, and as laying their interest to heart more nearly than those of any other of his members. Asterbury.

3. Appropriate; designed for a particular purpose.

O'Neal, upon his marriage with a daughter of Kildare, was made denizen by a special act of parliament. Daven.

Such things are evident by natural light, which men of a mature age, in the ordinary use of their faculties, with the common help of mutual society, may know and be sufficiently assured of without the help of any special revelation. Watkins.

4. Extraordinary; uncommon.

That which necessity of some special time doth cause to be enjoined, bindeth no longer than during that time, but doth afterward become free. H's.

The other scheme takes special care to attribut
all the work of conversion to grace. Hammer.

Though our charity should be universal, yet as it cannot be actually exercised but on particular times, so it should be chiefly on special opportunities. Spitt's Sermons.

5. Chief in excellence.

The king hath drawn
The special head of all the land together.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

SPE'CIALLY. adv. [from special.]

2. Not in a common way; peculiarly.

If there be matter of law that carries any difficulty, the jury may, to deliver themselves from an arraint, find it *spe*cially. Hale.

SPE'CIALTY. n. s. [specialité, Fr. from SPECIALITY.] *Spe*cially. Particularity.

On these two general heads all other specialities are dependent. Hooker.

The packet is not come
Where that and other specialities are bound. Shak.

*Spe*ciality of rule hath been neglected. Shakespeare.

When men were sure, that, in case they relied upon a bare contract without *spe*ciality, the other party might wage his law, they would not rest upon such contracts without reducing the debt into a *spe*ciality, which accorded many suits. Hale.

SPE'CIES. n. s. [species, Latin.]

1. A sort; a subdivision of a general term.

A *spe*cial idea is called by the schools a *spe*cies;
it is one common nature that agrees to several singular individual beings: to boue is a *spe*cial idea, or *spe*ries, as it agrees to Bucephalus, Trot, and Snowball. Watts.

2. Class of nature; single order of beings.

He intendeth the care of *spe*cies or common natures, but letteth loose the guard of individuals or single existencies. Brown.

The Phoenix Pindar is a whole *spe*cies alone.
Cowley.

For we are animals no less,
Although of different *spe*cies. Hudibras.

Thou canst not find a race which must proceed from me,
Yet my whole *spe*cies in myself I see. Dryden.

A mind of superior or meaner capacities than human, would constitute a different *spe*cies, tho' united to a human body in the same laws of connexion: and a mind of human capacities would make another *spe*cies, if united to a different body in different laws of connexion. Bentley's Sermons.

3. Appearance to the senses; any visible or sensible representation.

An apparent diversity between the species visible and audible is, that the visible doth not mingle in the medium, but the audible doth. Bacon.

It is a most certain rule, how much any body hath of colour, to much hath it of opacity, and by so much the more unfit it is to transmit the species. Ray on the Creation.

The species of the letters illuminated with blue, were nearer to the lens than those illuminated with deep red, by about three inches, or three and a quarter; but the species of the letters illuminated with indigo and violet appeared to confused and indistinct, that I could not read them. Newton's Opticks.

4. Representation to the mind.

Wit in the poet, or wit-writing, is no other than the faculty of imagination in the writer, which searches over all the memory for the species or ideas of those things which it designs to represent. Dryden.

5. Show; visible exhibition. Not in use; and perhaps, in the following quotation, misprinted for specacles.

Shews and species serve best with the people. Bacon.

6. Circulating money.

As there was in the splendour of the Roman empire a less quantity of current species in Europe than there is now, Rome possessed a much greater proportion of the circulating species of its time than any European city. Arbutnot.

7. Simples that have place in a compound medicine.

SPECIFIC. adj. [specificque, French; SPECIFIC. species and facio, Latin.]

1. That which makes a thing of the species of which it is.

The understandings, as to the exercise of this power, is subject to the command of the will, though, as to the specific nature of its acts, it is determined by the object. Locke.

By whose direction is the nutriment so regularly distributed into the respective parts, and how are they kept to their specific uniformities? Glanville.

These principles I consider not as occult qualities, supposed to result from the specific forms of things, but as general laws of nature, by which the things themselves are formed, their truth appearing to us as phenomena, though their causes be not yet discovered. Newton's Opticks.

As all things were formed according to these specific platforms, so their truth must be measured from their conformity to them. Norris.

Specific gravity is the appropriate and peculiar gravity or weight which any species or natural bodies have, and by which they are plainly distinguishable from all other bodies of different kinds. Rainey.

The specific qualities of plants abide in their native spirit, oil, and essential salt: for the water, fixt salt, and earth, appear to be the same in all plants. Abulgent.

Specific difference is that primary attribute which distinguishes each species from one another, while they stand ranked under the same general nature or genus. Though wine differs from other liquids, in that it is the juice of a certain fruit, yet this is but a general or generic difference; for it does not distinguish wine from cyder or perry: the specific difference of wine therefore is its pressure from the grape; as cyder is pressed from apples, and perry from pears. Watts.

2. [In medicine.] Appropriated to the cure of some particular d stemper. It is usually applied to the arcana, or medicines that work by occult qualities.

The operation of purging medicines has been referred to a hidden propriety, a specific virtue, and the like shifts of ignorance. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

If she would drink a good decoction of sassa, with the usual specifics, she might enjoy a good health. Wileman.

SPECIFICALLY. adv. [from specific.] In such a manner as to constitute a species; according to the nature of the species.

His faith must be not only living, but lively too; it must be put into a posture by a particular exercise of those several virtues that are specifically requisite to a due performance of this duty. South's Sermons.

Human reason doth not only gradually, but specifically, differ from the fantastick reason of brutes, which have no concept of truth, as an aggregate of divers simple conceits, nor of any other universal. Gray.

He must allow that bodies were endowed with the same affections then as ever since, and that, if an axe had be supposed to float upon water, which is specifically lighter, it had been unnatural. Bentley.

TO SPECIFICATE. v. a. [from species and facio, Latin.] To mark by notation of distinguishing particularities.

Man, by the instituted law of his creation, and the common influence of the divine goodness, is enabled to act as a reasonable creature, with out any particular, specifying, concurrent, new imperative act of the divine special providence. Hale.

SPECIFICATION. n. f. [from specific; specification, French.]

1. Distinct notation; determination by a peculiar mark.

This specification or limitation of the question, hinders the disputes from wandering away from the precise point of enquiry. Watts.

Quickfil can may, by the fire alone, in glass, and falsely, be turned into a red body; and from this red body may be obtained a mercury, bright and specular
as before. Ryle.

A speculum of metal without glass, made some years since for optical uses, and very well wrought, produced none of these things; and thence I understand that these things arise not from the specular surface alone, but depend upon the two surfaces of the plate of glass, and of the speculum was made, and upon the thickness of the glass between them. Newton.

2. Affixing sight Improper.

The best way

Of nature wouldst thou know, how first she frames

With rising gales, that speed their happy flight. Dryden.

Speed the soft intercourse from soul to soul,
And wait a sigh from Indus to the pole. Pope.

7. To make prosperous; to make to succeed.

If any bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed. St. Paul.

Vol. II.

He was chosen, though he stood low upon the roll, by a very unusual concurrence of providential events, happened to be speed. Fell.

SPEED. n. f. [speed, Dutch.]

1. Quickness; celerity.

Earth receives

As tribute, such a sunless journey brought
Of incorporeal speed, her warmth and light;
Speed! to describe whole swiftness number fails. Milton.

We observe the horse's patient service at the plough, his speed upon the highway, his docible-ness, and desire of glory. M. re.

2. Haste; hurry; dispatch.

When they strain to their utmost speed, there is still the wanted distance between them and their aim: all their eager pursuits bring them no acquests. Decay of Piety.

3. The course or pace of a horse.

He that rides at high speed, and with a pistol kills a sparrow flying. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

4. Success; event of any action or incident.

The prince your son, with mere conceit and fear
Of the queen's speed, is gone. Shakespeare.
O Lord, I pity thee send me good speed. Gib. xxii. 12.

SPEDILY. adv. [from speedy.] With haste; quickly.

Post speedily to your husband,
Shew him this letter. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Send speedily to Bertran; charge him strictly Not to proceed. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

SPEDINESS. n. f. [from speedy.] The quality of being speedy.

SPEDWELL. n. f. [Spedwella, Latin.]
Fluellin. A plant.

In a scarcity in Silesia a rumour was spread of its raining miller seed; but it was found to be only the seed of the ivy-leaved spedwell, or small hen-bit. Dorham's Physico-Theology.

SPEDY. adj. [from speed.] Quick; swift;
nimble; quick of dispatch.

How near 's the other army?
—Near, and on speedy foot: the main delivery Stands on the hourly thought. Shak. King Lear.
Back with speedy sail
Zophiel, of cherubim the swiftest wing, Came flying. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Let it be enough what thou hast done,
When spotted death's ran aim'd through every sweet,
With poison'd darts, which not the god could thum,
The speedy could outfly, or valiant meet. Dryden.

SPRIGHT. n. f. [picus martius, Lat.] A bird.

SPELL. n. f. [spel, Saxon, a word.]

1. A charm consisting of some words of occult power. Thus Horace uses words:

*Sunt verba et voces quibus hunc lenire
dolorem*

Poiss.

Start not; her actions shall be holy.
You hear my spell is lawful: do not ban her,
Until you see her die again; for then
You kill her double. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Some have delivered the polity of spirits, that they stand in awe of charm, spells, and conjurations, letters, characters, notes, and dithers.

Roman's Vulgar Errors.

Thou durst not thus dispage glorious arms,
Had not spells

And black enchantments, some magician's art, Arm'd thee or charm'd thee strong. Milt. Against.

Begin, begin; the mystick spell prepare. Milton.
Yourself you to excel,

When you vouchsafe to breathe my thought,
That, like a spirit, with this spell

Of my own teaching I am taught. Waller.
Mild Lucina

Then reach'd her midwife hands to speed the throes,
And spoke the powerful spells that babes to birth disclose. Dryden.

2. A turn of work; a vicissitude of labour.

A low word.

Their toil is so extreme as they cannot endure it above four hours in a day, but are succeded by spells: the residue of the time they wear out at coytes and kayles. Carew.

To SPELL. v. a. pret. and part. pass.
spelled or spelt: [spellen, Dutch.]

1. To write with the proper letters.

In the criticism of spelling, the word spare ought to be with i, and not with y; and if this be so, then it is the spelled throughout. Dryden's Jew. Did.

2. To read by naming letters singly.

I never ye saw man,
How wise, how noble, young, how rarely featu'd,
But she would spell him backward; if fair fac'd,
She'd swear the gentleman should be her sister. Shakespeare.

3. To charm.

I have you fast:
Unchain your spirits now with spelling charms,
And try if they can gain your liberty. Shak. H. VI.
Thus, yath'd in the planetary hour,
With various words, and spelled with words of pow'r, Dne steplames in the magic bowl infuse. Dryden.

To SPELL. v. n.

1. To form words of letters.

What small knowledge was, in them did dwell;
And he a god, who could but read or spell. Dryden.
By passing on the vowels and consonants on the sides of your dice, he has made this a play for his children, whereby his eldest son in coats has played himself into spelling. Locke.

The Latin being written of the same character with the mother tongue, by the assistance of a spelling book it is legible. Speltator.

Another cause, which hath maimed our language, is a foolish opinion that we ought to spell exactly as we speak. Swift.

2. To read.

If I read aught in heaven,
Or heav'n write aught of late, by what the stars,
Voluminous or single characters,
In their conjunction met, give me to spell,
Sorrows and labours, opposition, hate, Attend thee. Milton's Paradise Lost.

When gowns, not arms, repell'd
The fierce Epizote, and the African bold,
Whether to settle peace, or to unfold
The drift of hollow states, hard to be spelled. Milt.

And may at last my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
Where I may sit and rightly spell
Of every star that heav'n duch shew,
And every herb that tips the dew. Milt.

3. To read unskillfully.

As to his underitading, they bring him in void of all notion; a rude unwritten blank, sent into the world only to read and spell out a God in the works of creation. Scots.

To SPALT. v. n. To split; to break. A bad word.

Fred geete with oats, spelled beans, barley meal, or ground malt mixed with beer. Mert. Husbandry.

SPELTER. n. f. A kind of semimetal.

Metals in fusion do not flame, for want of a copious fume; except spelter, which fumes copiously, and the eby spelter. Norton.

To SPEND. v. n. [rpenban, Saxon; spen-dere, Italian.]

1. To consume; to exhaust; to waste.

Our cannons malice vainly shall be spent
Against th' invulnerable clout. Shakespeare.
I will very gladly spend and be spent for you. 2 Cor. xii. 15.

There is oil in the dwelling of the wife, but a foolish man spends it up. Prov. xxi. 20.

We must exasperate
The almighty Victor to spend all his rage. Milt.
Money is brought into England by nothing but spending here less of foreign commodities than when we carry to market can pay for. Locke.

U

1. To

2. To bestow, as expence; to expend, as cost.

Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? Isaiah, l. 2.

3. To bestow for any purpose: often with upon.

When we can intreat an hour to serve, Would spend it in some words upon that bullneck, If you would grant the time. Shakespeare's Macb. Elutherius, perceiving that he was unwilling to spend any more time upon the debate, thought not fit to make any intension to him of the proposed opinion. Bayle.

4. To effuse.

Coward dogs Most spend their mouths, when what they seem to threaten Runs far before them. Shakespeare's Henry V.

5. To squander; to lavish.

The whole of our reflections terminate in this, what course we are to take to pass our time; some to get, and others to spend, their estates. Wake.

6. To pass; to suffer to pass away.

In those pastoral pastimes a great many days were spent, to follow their flying predecessors. Sidon. They spend their days in wealth, and in a moment go down to the grave. Job, xxi. 13. He spends his life with his wife, and remembereth neither father nor mother. 1 Esdras, iv. 21.

Says, for you saw us, ye immortal lights! How oft unwearied have we spent the nights, Till the Ledman flares, so fam'd for love, Wonder'd at us from above. Cowley.

When he was of riper years, for his farther accomplishment, he spent a considerable part of his time in travelling. Pope.

7. To waste; to wear out; to exhaust of force.

The waves ascended and descended, till their violence being spent by degrees, they settled at last.

They bend their bows, they whirl their slings around; Heaps of spent arrows fall, and strew the ground. Dryden.

The winds are rais'd, the storm blows high; Be it your care, my friends, to keep it up In its full fury, and direct it right, Till it has spent itself on Cato's head. Add. Cat.

8. To fatigue; to harass.

Nothing but only the hope of spoil did relieve them, having scarce clothes to cover their nakedness, and their bodies spent with long labour and thirst. Rodolphe's History of the Turks.

Or come your shipping in our ports to lay, Spent and disabled in so long a way? Dryd. Abs.

Our walls are thinly mann'd, our best men slain; The rest, an heartless number, spent with watching, And harass'd out with duty. Dryden.

Some spent with toil, some with despair oppress'd, Leap'd headlong from the heights; the flames consumed the rest. Dryden's Abscond.

'Tis thou art that hast seen me Wrestling with vice and fashion; now thou seest me Spent, overpower'd, despairing of success. Addison's Cato.

To SPEND. v. n.

1. To make expence.

Henceforth your tongue must spend at leader rate Than in its flames to wrap a nation's fate. Dryd.

He spends as a person who knows that he must come to a reckoning. South.

2. To prove in the use.

Butter spent as if it came from the richer soil. Tewple.

3. To be lost or wasted.

The sound spends, and is dissipated in the open air; but in such concaves it is conserved and contracted. Racine.

On mountains, it may be, many dews fall, that before they come to the valleys. Bacon.

To be employed to any use.

There have been cups and an image of Jupiter made of wild vines; for the vines that they use for wine are so often cut, that their sap spends into the grapes. Bacon.

SPENDER. n. f. [from spend.]

1. One who spends.

Let not your recreations be lavish spenders of your time; but healthful, short, and apt to refresh you. Taylor.

2. A prodigal; a lavisher.

Bishop Morton told the commissioners, who were to levy the benevolence, if they met with any that were spending, to tell them that they must needs have, because they laid up; and if they were spenders, they must needs have, because it was seen in their port and manner of living. Bac. Hen. VII.

SPENDTHRIFT. n. f. [spend and thrif.]

A prodigal; a lavisher.

Bitter cold weather starved both the bird and the spendthrift. L'Estrange.

Some fawning usurer does feed With present fums th' unwary spendthrift's need. Dryden.

Most men, like spendthrift heirs, judge a little in hand better than a great deal to come. Locke.

The son, bred in sloth, becomes a spendthrift, a profligate, and goes out of the world a beggar. Swift.

SPERABLE. adj. [spereabilis, Latin.] Such as may be hoped. Not in use.

We may cast it away, if it be found but a bladder, and discharge it of so much as is vain and not spereable. Bacon.

SPERM. n. f. [sperme, Fr. sperma, Lat.] Seed; that by which the species is continued.

Some creatures bring forth many young ones at a burthen, and some but one: this may be caused by the quantity of sperm required, or by the partitions of the womb which may sever the sperm. Bacon.

There is required to the preparation of the sperm of animals, a great apparatus of vessels, many secretions, concoctions, reflections, and circulations. Ray.

SPERMACETI. n. f. [Lat.] Corruptedly pronounced parmafit.

A particular sort of whale affords the oil whence this is made; and that is very improperly called sperma, because it is only the oil which comes from the head of which it can be made. It is changed from what it is naturally, the oil itself being very brown and rank. The peculiar property of it is, to shoot into flakes, not much unlike the crystallization of salts; but in this state 'tis yellow, and has a certain rankness, from which it is freed by squeezing it between warm metalline plates: at length it becomes perfectly pure, inodorous, flaky, smooth, white, and in some measure transparent. Quincy.

SPERMATICAL. } adj. [spermatique, Fr.]

SPERMATICK. } from sperm]

1. Seminal; consisting of seed.

The primordials of the world are not mechanical, but spermatical or vital. Moré's Dialogues.

Merals and sundry meteors rude shapes have no need of any particular principle of life, or spermatical form, distinct from the rest or motion of the particles of the matter. Moré.

2. Belonging to the sperm; containing sperm.

The mixture of the body, which did before irrigate the parts, is drawn down to the spermatical vessels. Bacon.

Two different sexes must concur to their generation: there is in both a great apparatus of spermatical vessels, wherein the more spirituous part of the blood is by many digestions and circulations exalted into sperm. Ray on the Creation.

To SPERMATIZE. v. n. [from sperm.] To yield seed.

Aristotle affirming that women do not spermatize, and confer a receptacle, rather than essential principles of generation, deductively include both sexes in mankind. Brown.

SPERMATOCÆLE. n. f. [σπερμα and καλή.]

A rupture caused by the contraction of the seminal vessels, and the semen falling into the scrotum. Bailey.

SPERMOLOGIST. n. f. [σπερματολόγος.] One who gathers or treats of seeds. Diæ.

To SPERSE. v. a. [spersus, Lat.] To disperse; to scatter. A word not now in use.

The wrathful wind, Which blows cold storms, burst out of Scythian mews, That spers those clouds, and in to short as thought This dreadful shape was vanished to nought. Spens.

He making speedy way through spers'd air, And through the world of waters wide and deep, To Murpheus' house doth hastily repair. F. Queen.

To SPET. v. a. [Spet in Scotland is a superabundance of water: as, that tide or fresh was a high spet.] To bring or pour abundantly.

Mysterious dame, That ne'er art call'd but when the dragon womb Of Stygian darkness spets her thickest gloom, And makes one blot of all the air, Stop thy cloudy ebony chair. Milton.

To SPEW. v. a. [spepan, Saxon; spewen, Dutch.]

1. To vomit; to eject from the stomach.

A swordfish smelt him from the rest did funder, That in his throat him picking softly under His wide abyss, him forced forth to spew, That all the sea did roar like heaven's thunder, And all the waves were stain'd with filthy duc. Spenser.

2. To eject; to cast forth.

When earth with slime and mud is cover'd o'er, Or hollow places spew their wat'ry store. Dryden's Georgicks.

When yellow sands are sifted from below, The glittering billows give a golden show; And when the fouler bottom spews the black, The Stygian dye the tainted waters take. Dryd.

3. To eject with loathing.

Keep my statutes, and commit not any of these abominations, that the land spew not you out. Lev. xviii. 28.

Contentious suits ought to be spewed out, as the surfeit of courts. Bacon's Essays.

To SPEW. v. n. To vomit; to ease the stomach.

He could have haul'd in The drunkards, and the noises of the inn: But better 'twas that they should sleep or spew, Than in the scene to offend or him or you. Ben Jonson.

SPEWY. adj. [from spew.] Wet; foggy.

A provincial word.

The lower vallies in wet winters are so spewy, that they know not how to feed them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To SPHACELATE. v. a. [from sphacelus, medical Latin.] To affect with a gangrene.

The long retention of matter sphacelates the brain. Sharp.

To SPHACELATE. v. n. To mortify; to suffer the gangrene.

The skin, by the great distention, having been rendered very thin, will, if not taken away, sphacelate, and the rest degenerate into a cancerous ulcer. Sharp's Surgery.

SPHACELUS. n. f. [σφάκελος; sphacelus, Fr.] A gangrene; a mortification.

It is the ground of inflammation, gangrene, sphacelus. Willemans.

SPHERE. n. f. [sphæra, Fr. sphæra, Lat.]

1. A globe; an orbicular body; a body of which the center is at the same distance from every point of the circumference.

First the sun, a mighty sphere, he fram'd. Milt.

2. Any globe of the mundane system.

What is within the moon's fair shining sphere,
What if in every other star unseen,
Of other worlds he happily should hear? F. Queen

And then mortal ears

Had heard the music of the spheres. Dryden.

3. A globe representing the earth or sky.

Two figures on the sides embold appear;
Conon, and what's his name who made the sphere,
And shew'd the seasons of the sliding year? Dryd.

4. Orb; circuit of motion.

Half unlong, but narrower bound With'n the visible diurnal sphere. Milton.

5. [from the sphere of activity ascribed to the power emanating from bodies.] Province; compass of knowledge or action; employment.

To be call'd into a huge sphere, and not to be seen
To move in't. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.
Of enemies he could not but contact good store,
While moving in so high a sphere, and with so vigorous a lustre. King Charles.

Every man, versed in any particular business, finds fault with these authors, so far as they treat of matters within his sphere. Addison's Freeholder.
Ye know the spheres and various tasks assign'd
By laws eternal to th' æthereal kind. Pope.

The hermit's prayer permitted, not approv'd,
Soon in an higher sphere Eulogius mov'd. Harte.

TO SPHERE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To place in a sphere.

The glorious planet Sol,
In noble eminence enthron'd and sphere'd
Amidst the rest, whose med'nable eye
Corrects the ill aspects of planets evil. Shakespeare.

2. To form into roundness.

Light from her native east
To journey through the airy gloom began,
Sphere'd in a radiant cloud; for yet the sun
Was not. Milton's Paradise Lost.

SPHERICAL. adj. [sphæricus, Fr. from sphæra.]

SPHERICK. adj. [sphæricus.]

1. Round; orbicular; globular.

What deficient of waters could there be in a spherical and round body, wherein there is nor high nor low?
Raleigh.

Though sounds spread round, so that there is an orb or spherical area of the sound, yet they go farthest in the forelines from the first local impulsion of the air.
Bacon.

By discernment of the moisture drawn up in vapours, we must know the reason of the spherical figures of the drops. Clavius.

A fluid mass necessarily falls into a spherical surface.
Keil.

Where the central module was globular, the inner surface of the first crust would be spherical; and if the crust was in all parts of the same thickness, that whole crust would be spherical. Woodward.

2. Planetary; relating to the orbs of the planets.

We make guilty of our disasters the sun, the moon, and stars, as if we were villains by spherical predominance. Shakespeare.

SPHERICALLY. adv. [from spherical.] In form of a sphere.

SPHERICALNESS. n. f. [from sphere.]

SPHERICITY. n. f. Roundness; roundness.

Such bodies receive their figure and limits from such lets as hinder them from attaining to that spherical figure they aim at. Digby.

Water consists of small, smooth, spherical particles;
their smoothness makes 'em slip easily upon one another; the sphericity keeps 'em from touching one another in more points than one.

Chayne's Phil. Spherical Principles.

SPHEROID. n. f. [sphaïra and ïdos; sphaïroïde, Fr.] A body oblong or oblate, approaching to the form of a sphere.

They are not solid particles, by the necessity they are under to change their figures into oblong spheroids, in the capillary vessels. Chayne's Phil. Prin.

SPHEROIDICAL. adj. [from spheroid.]

Having the form of a spheroid.

If these corpuscles be spheroidical, or oval, their shortest diameters must not be much greater than those of light. Chayne.

SPHERULE. n. f. [sphaerula, Lat.] A little globe.

Mercury is a collection of exceeding small, vastly heavy spherules. Chayne's Philosophical Principles.

SPHINX. n. f. [sphînx.]

The sphinx was a famous monster in Egypt, that remained by conjoined Nilus, having the face of a virgin, and the body of a lion. Peach. on Drawing.

SPIAL. n. f. [espial, Fr.] A spy; a scout; a watcher. Obsolete.

His ears be as spials, alarm to eie. Tass. Husb.
He privy spials plac'd in all his way,
To weet what course he takes, and how he fares. Spenser.

For he by faithful spial was assur'd
That Egypt's king was forward on his way. Fairf.
Their trust towards them hath rather been as to good spials and good whisperers, than good magistrates and officers. Bacon.

SPICE. n. f. [espices, French.]

1. A vegetable production, fragrant to the smell and pungent to the palate; an aromatick substance used in sauces.

Dang'rous rocks,
Which, touching but my gentle vessel's side,
Would scatter all the spices on the stream. Shak.
Is it manhood, learning, gentleness, and virtue,
the spice and salt that seasons a man?
Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

Garlick, the northern spice, is in mighty request among the Indians. Temple.
High sauces and rich spices are fetched from the Indies. Baker.

2. A small quantity, as of spice to the thing seasoned.

Think what they have done,
And then run stark mad; for all Thy hy-gone folleries were but spices of it. Shak.
It containeth singular relations, not without some spice or sprinkling of all learning.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

So in the wicked there's no vice,
Of which the saints have not a spice. Hudibras.

TO SPICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To season with spice; to mix with aromatick bodies.

His mother was a wotress of my order,
And in the spicy Indian air by night
Full often the hath gossip'd by my side. Shakespeare.

With a festival

She'll first receive thee; but will spice thy bread
With flow'ry passions. Chapman.

Thine hymns may work on future wits, and so
May great-grandchildren of thy praises grow;
And so, though not revive, embalm and spice
The world, which else would putrify with vice. Donne.

What though some have a freight
Of cloves and nutmegs, and in cinnamon sail,
It thou hast wherewithal to spice a draught,
When griefs prevail? Herbert.

SPICER. n. f. [from spice.] One who deals in spice.

Names have been derived from occupations, as Saler and Spicer. Camden.

SPICERY. n. f. [spicerius, French; from spice.]

1. The commodity of spices.

Their camels were loaden with spicery, and balm and myrrh. Raleigh's History of the World.
She in whole body

The western treasure, eastern spicery,
Europe and Africk, and the unknown rest,
Were easily found. Donne.

2. A repository of spices.

The spicery, the cellar and its furniture, are too well known to be here insisted upon. Add. on Italy.

SPICK and SPAN. [This word I should not have expected to have found authorized by a polite writer. Span-new is used by Chaucer, and is supposed to come from spannan, to stretch, Saxon; expandere, Latin; whence span. Span-new is therefore originally used of cloth new extended or dressed at the clothiers, and spick and span is newly extended on the spikes or tenters; it is however a low word.] Quite new; now first used.

While the honour thou hast got
Is spick and span new, piping hot,
Strike her up bravely. Butler.
They would have these reduced to nothing, and then others created spick and span new out of nothing. Burnet.

I keep no antiquated stuff;
But spick and span I have enough. Swift.

SPICKNEL. n. f. [meum, Lat.] The herb maldmony or bearwort. Diæ.

SPICY. adj. [from spice.]

1. Producing spice; abounding with aromatics.

Off at sea north-east winds blow
Saban odour, from the spicy shore
Of Araby the blest; with such delay
Well pleas'd they slack their course; and many a league,
Cheer'd with the grateful smell, old ocean smiles. Milton.

For them the Idumæan balm did sweat,
And in hot Ceylon spicy forests grew. Dryden.

2. Aromatick; having the qualities of spice.

The regimen in this disease ought to be of spicy and cephalick vegetables, to dispel the viscosity.

Arbutnot on Diet.

Under southern skies exalt their sails,
Led by new stars, and borne by spicy gales! Pope.

SPICOSITY. n. f. [spica, Lat.] The quality of being spiked like ears of corn; fullness of ears. Diæ.

SPIDER. n. f. [Skinner thinks this word softened from spender, or spinner, from spin. Junius, with his usual felicity, dreams that it comes from ovis, to extend; for the spider extends his web.

Pethaps it comes from spiden, Dutch, Speyden, Danish, to spy, to lie upon the catch. Dop, boga, Saxon, is a beetle, or properly an humble bee, or single bee. May not spider be spy dor, the insect that watches the dor? The animal that spins a web for flies.

More direful hap betide that hated wretch,
Than I can wish to adders, spiders, toads. Shak.
The spider's web to watch we'll stand,
And, when it takes the bee,

We'll help out of the tyrant's hand
The innocent to free. Drayton.

Insidious, restless, watchful spider,
Fear no officious damsel's broom;
Extend thy artful fabrick wider,
And spread thy banners round my room;

While

While I thy curious fabrick stare at,
And think on hapless poet's fate,
Like thee confin'd to noisome garret,
And rudely banish'd rooms of state.
The spider's touch, how exquisitely fine!
Feels at each thread, and lives along the line.

Pope.

Dryden.

The gleam re,
Spile after spile, their spading harvest, pick.

Thomson.

2. A long nail of iron or wood; a long rod of iron sharpened: so called from its similitude to an ear.

For the body of the ships, no nation equals England for the oak timber, and we need not borrow of any other iron for spiles or nails to fasten them.

Bacon.

The head of your medal would be seen to more advantage, if it were placed on a spike of the tower.

Dryden.

He wears on his head the corona radiata, another type of his divinity: the spiles that shoot out represent the rays of the sun.

Addison.

SPIKE. n. f. The name of a plant. This is a smaller species of lavender.

The oil of spike is much used by our artificers in their varnishes; but it is generally adulterated.

Hill's Matrua Medua.

with a spill.

Mortimer.

2. A small quantity of money. I know not whence derived.

The bishops, who consecrated this ground, were wont to have a spill or spoutale from the credulous lady.

Ayliffe.

To SPILL. v. a. [spillen, Saxon; spillen,
Dutch; spilla, Islandick.]

1. To shed; to lose by shedding.

Be satisfied, dear God, with our true blood,
Which, as thou know'st, unjustly must be spill.

Shakespeare.

Friend or brother,

He forfeits his own blood that spills another.

Shakespeare's Timon.

Themselves exact their cruelty,

And I constrained am this blood to spill.

David's Civil War.

They having spilled much blood, and done much wail,

Subduing nations; and achiev'd thereby
Fame in the world, high titles, and rich prey;

Still change their course to pleasure, ease, and still.

Milton.

Medea will not draw her murthering knife,
And spill her children's blood upon the stage.

Resolomon.

Orbelian did disgrace
With treasonous deeds our mighty mother's race;
And to revenge his blood, so justly spill,

What is it less than to partake his guilt?

Nor the Centaur's tale

Be here repeated; how, with lust and wine
Inflam'd, they thought and spill their drunken souls
At feasting hour.

Philips.

2. To destroy; to mischief.

Thus is our thought with pain of thistle filled,
Thus be our noblest parts dried up with sorrow;
Thus is our mind with too much minding spilled.

Sidney.

Why are you so fierce and cruel?
Is it because your eyes have power to kill?

Then know that mercy is the Mighty's jewel,
And greater glory think to save than spill.

Spenser.

Thou all-shaking thunder,
Crack nature's mould, all genuine spill at once
That make ingrateful man.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

Be not angry with these fires;
For then the thunders will kill me:

Nor look too kind on my defects;

For then my hopes will spill me.

Ben Jonson.

All bodies are with other bodies fill'd;
But she receives both heav'n and earth together:

Nor are their forms by rash encounters spill'd;

For there they stand, and neither toucheth either.

Davies.

3. To throw away.

This fight shall damp the raging Russian's breast,
The poison spill, and half-drawn sword arrest.

Tickell.

To SPILL. v. n.

downwards, backwards, forwards, and round, as they that spin.

M. G.

Ten thousand stalks their various blossoms spread;
Peaceful and lowly in their native soil,

They neither know to spin, nor care to toil.

Prior.

For this Alcides learn'd to spin;
His club laid down, and lion's skin.

Prior.

2. [Spingere, Italian.] To stream out in a thread or small current.

Together furiously they ran,
That to the ground came horse and man;
The blood out of their helmets spun,
So sharp were their encounters.

Dryden's Nymphs.

3. To move round as a spindle.

Whether the sun, predominant in heav'n,
Rise on the earth, or earth rise on the sun;
He from the east his flaming road begin,
Or the from west her silent course advance

With inoffensive pace, that spinning sleeps
On her soft axle, while she paces ev'n
And bears thee soft with the smooth air along,

Solicit not thy thoughts, Milton's Paradise Lost.

As when a shipwright stands his workmen o'er,
Who ply the wimble some huge beam to bore;

Urg'd on all hands, it wimble spins about,

The grain deep piercing till it scoops it out.

Pope.

SPINACH. n. f. [spinachia, Latin.] A

SPINAGE. n. f. plant.

It hath an apetalous flower, consisting of many filamina included in the flower-cup, which are produced in spikes upon the male plants which are barren; but the embryos are produced from the wings of the leaves on the female plants, which afterward become roundish or angular seeds, which,
in some sorts, have thorns adhering to them.

Spinage is an excellent herb, crude or boiled.

Mortimer.

SPINAL. adj. [spina, Lat.] Belonging to the backbone.

All spinal, or such as have no ribs, but only a back bone, are somewhat analogous thereto.

Brown's Palgar Errors.

Those solids are entirely nervous, and proceed from the brain and spinal marrow, which by their bulk

bulk appear sufficient to furnish all the fibres or threads of the solid parts.

Defending careless from his couch, the fall
Lux'd his joint neck, and spinal marrow bruise'd.

SPINDLE. n. f. [spinol, spinel, Saxon.]

1. The pin by which the thread is formed, and on which it is conglomerated.

Bodies fibrous by moisture incorporate with other thread, especially if there be a little wreathing; as appeareth by the twisting of thread, and twirling about of spindles.

Sing to those that hold the vital fathers,
And turn the adamant spindle round
On which the fate of gods and men is wound.

Upon a true repentance, God is not so fatally tied to the spindle of absolute reprobation, as not to keep his promise, and seal merciful pardons.

So Pallas from the dusty field withdrew,
And, when imperial Jove appear'd in view,
Reclam'd her female arts, the spindle and the clew;
Forgets the sceptre she so well had sway'd,
Am', with that mildness she had rul'd, obey'd.

Do you take me for a Roman matron,
Bred famely to the spindle and the loom?

2. A long slender stalk.

The spindles must be tied up, and, as they grow in height, rods set by them, lest by their bending they should break.

3. Any thing slender. In contempt.

2. [spira, Latin.] To breathe. Not in use.

SPIRIT. n. f. [spiritus, Lat.]

1. Breath; wind.

All purges have in them a raw spirit or wind, which is the principal cause of tension in the stomach.

All bodies have spirits and pneumatical parts within them; but the main difference between animate and inanimate are, that the spirits of things animate are continued within themselves, and branched in veins as blood is; and the spirits have also certain seats where the principal do reside, and whereunto the rest do resort; but the spirits in things inanimate are shut in and cut off by the tangible parts, as air in snow.

The balmy spirit of the western breeze.

2. [esprit, Fr.] An immaterial substance; an intellectual being.

Spirit is a substance wherein thinking, knowing, doubting, and a power of moving, do subsist.

She is a spirit; yet not like air or wind,
Nor like the spirit about the heart or brain;

Nor like those spirits which alchemists do find,
When they in every thing seek gold in vain:

For the all-natures under heav'n doth pass,
Being like those spirits which God's bright face do sees;

Or like himself, whose image once he was,
Though now, alas! the scarce his shadow be;

For of all forms he holds the first degree,
That are to gross material bodies knit;

Yet he himself is bodiless and free,
And though confin'd is almost infinite.

I shall depend upon your constant friendship; like the trust we have in benevolent spirits, who, though we never see or hear them, we think are constantly praying for us.

If we exclude space, there will remain in the world but matter and mind, or body and spirit.

You are all of you pure spirits. I don't mean that you have not bodies that want meat and drink, and sleep and clothing; but that all that deserves to be called you, is nothing else but spirit.

3. The soul of man.

The spirit shall return unto God that gave it.

Look, who comes here? a grave unto a soul,
Holding th' eternal spirit 'gainst her will

In the vile prison of afflicted breath.

Every thing that you call yours, besides this spirit, is but like your clothing: sometimes that is only to be used for a while, and then to end, and die, and wear away.

4. An apparition.

They were terrified, and supposed that they had seen a spirit.

Perhaps you might see the image, and not the glass; the former appearing like a spirit in the air. Bacon.

Whilst young, preserve his tender mind from all impressions of spirits and goblins in the dark. Locke.
5. Temper; habitual disposition of mind.

He sits
Upon their tongues a various spirit, to raise Quite out their native language. Milton.
That peculiar law of Christianity, which forbids revenge, no man can think grievous, who considers the restless torment of a malicious and revengeful spirit. Tillotson.

Nor once disturb their heav'nly spirits
With Scapin's cheats, or Cæsar's merits. Prior.
Let them consider how far they are from that spirit which prays for its most unjust enemies, if they have not kindness enough to pray for those, by whose labours and service they live in ease themselves. Law.

He is the devout man, who lives no longer on his own will, or the wav and spirit of the world, but to the sole will of God. Law.

6. Ardour; courage; elevation; vehemence of mind.

'Tis well blown, lads;
This morning, like the spirit of a youth
That means to be of note, begins betimes. Shak.
Farewel the big war,
'The spirit stirring drum, th' ear piercing sife. Shak.
'The king's party, called the cavaliers, began to recover their spirits. Swift.

7. Genius; vigour of mind.

More active spirit than hitherto was wont
Here needs me, while the famous ancestors
Of my most dreaded sovereign I recount,
By which all earthly princes the doth far surmount.
Fairy Queen.
To a mighty work thou goest, O king,
That equal spirits and equal pow'rs shall bring. Daniel.

A wild Tartar, when he spies
A man that's handsome, valiant, wife,
If he can kill him, thinks t' inherit
His wit, his beauty, and his spirit. Butler.
Thenoblest spirit or genius cannot deserve enough of mankind, to pretend to the esteem of heroick virtue. Temple.

8. Turn of mind; power of mind moral or intellectual.

You were us'd
To say extremity was the trier of spirits,
That common chances common men could bear. Shakespeare.

I ask but half thy mighty spirit for me. Cowley.
A perfect judge will read each work of wit
With the same spirit that its author writ:
Survey the whole, nor seek slight fault to find,
Where nature moves, and rapture warms, the mind. Pope.

9. Intellectual powers distinct from the body.

These discourses made so deep impression upon the mind and spirit of the prince, whose nature was inclined to adventures, that he was transported with the thought of it. Clarendon.

In spirit perhaps he also saw Rich Mexico, the flat of Montezume. Milton.

10. Sentiment; perception.

You are too great to be by me gain'd;
Your spirit is too true, your tears too certain. Shak.

11. Eagerness; desire.

God has changed men's tempers with the times, and made a spirit of building succeed a spirit of pulling down. Saurb.

12. Man of activity; man of life, fire, and enterprise.

The watry kingdom is no bar
To stop the foreign spirits, but they come. Shak.

13. Persons distinguished by qualities of the mind. A French word, happily growing obsolete.

from the rising up of some schismatical spirits amongst us, conclude that the main body of our church is schismatical, because some branches or members thereof were such. White.

Of plying God did well-form'd spirits raise,
Fit for the toilsome business of their days,
To free the groaning nation, and to give Peace first, and then the rules in peace to live. Cowley.

Such spirits as he desired to please, such would
I chose for my judges. Dryden.

14. That which gives vigour or cheerfulness to the mind; the purest part of the body, bordering, says Sydenham, on immateriality. In this meaning it is commonly written with the plural termination.

Though thou didst but jest,
With my vex'd spirits I cannot take a truce,
But they will quake. Shakespeare's King John.
When I sit and tell
The warlike feats I've done, his spirits fly out Into my story. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Alas! when all our lamps are burn'd,
Our bodies wasted, and our spirits spent,
When we have all the learned volumes turn'd,
Which yield men's wits both help and ornament,
What can we know, or what can we discern? Dew.
It was the time when gentle night began
T' indrench with sleep the busy spirits of man. Cowley.

To sing thy praise, would heav'n my breath prolong,
Infusing spirits worthy such a song,
Not 'I luacian Orpheus should transcend my lay'. Dryden.

All men by experience find the necessity and aid of the spirits in the business of concoction. Blackmore.
By means of the curious insensation of the auditory nerves, the organs of the spirits should be allayed. Derham.

In some fair body thus the secret soul
With spirits seeds, with vigour fills, the whole;
Each motion guides, and ev'ry nerve sustains,
Itself unseen, but in th' effects remains. Pope.
He is always forced to drink a hearty glass, to drive thoughts of business out of his head, and make his spirits drowsy enough for sleep. Law.

15. Characteristical likeness; essential qualities.

Italian pieces will appear best in a room where the windows are high, because they are commonly made to a descending light, which of all other doth set off men's faces in their truest spirits. Watson.

16. Any thing eminently pure and refined.

Nor doth the eye itself,
That most pure spirit of sense, behold itself. Shak.

17. That which hath power or energy.

There is in wine a mighty spirit, that will not be congealed. South.

18. An inflammable liquor raised by distillation: as brandy, rum.

What the chymists call spirit, they apply the name to so many different things, that they seem to have no settled notion of the thing. In general, they give the name of spirit to any distilled volatile liquor. Boyle.

All spirits, by frequent use, destroy, and at last extinguish the natural heat of the stomach. Temple.
In distillation, what trickles down the sides of the receiver, if it will not mix with water, is oil;
if it will, it is spirit. Arbutnot on Aliments.

19. It may be observed, that in the poets spirit was a monosyllable, and therefore was often written prits, or, less properly, spights.

The charge thereof unto a courteous spight
Commanded was. Spenser.

To SPIRIT. v. a.

 Their logic has appeared the mere art of wrangling, and their metaphysick the skill of splitting an hair, of distinguishing without a difference. Watts on the Mind.

One and the same ray is by refraction disturbed, shattered, dilated, and split, and spread into many diverging rays. Newton.

He instances Luther's sensuality and disbedience, two crimes which he has dealt with; and, to make the more solemn shew, he splits 'em into twenty. Atterbury.

Oh! would it please the gods to split
 Thy beauty, size, and years, and wit,
 No age could furnish out a pair
 Of nymphs so graceful, wise, and fair;
 With half the lustre of your eyes,
 With half your wit, your years, and size. Swift.

3. To dash and break on a rock.
 God's desertion, as a full and violent wind, drives him in an instant, not to the harbour, but on the rock where he will be irrecoverably split. Decay of Piety.

Those who live by shores with joy behold
 Some wealthy vessel split or stranded nigh;
 And from the rocks leap down for shipwreck'd gold,
 And seek the tempests which the others fly. Dryden.

4. To divide; to break into discord.
 In states notoriously unreligious, a secret and irresistible power splits their counsels, and smites their most refined policies with frustration and a curb. South.

To SPLIT. v. n.
 1. To burst in sunder; to crack; to suffer disruption.

A huge vessel of exceeding hard marble splits asunder by congealed water. Boyle.

What is 't to me,
 Who never sail on her unfaithful sea,

If storms arise and clouds grow black,
 If the mast splits, and threaten wrack? Dryden.
 The road that to the lungs this store transmits,
 Into unnumber'd narrow channels splits. Blackm.

2. To burst with laughter.
 Each had a gravity would make you split,
 And shook his head at M— as a wit. Pope.

3. To be broken against rocks.
 After our ship did split,
 When you, and the poor number sav'd with you,
 Hung on our driving boat. Shakspeare.
 These are the rocks on which the sanguine tribe of lovers daily split, and on which the politician, the alchymist, and projector are cast away. Addison's Spectator.

The seamen spied a rock, and the wind was so strong that we were driven directly upon it, and immediately split. Swift.

SPLITTER. n. f. [from split.] One who splits.

How should we rejoice, if, like Judas the first,
 Those splitters of passions in sunder should burst! Swift.

SPLUTTER. n. f. Bustle; tumult. A low word.

To SPOIL. v. a. [spolio, Latin; spolier, French.]

Women are not only spoiled by this education, but we spoil that part of the world which would otherwise furnish most instances of an eminent and exalted piety. Law.

To SPOIL. v. n.

1. To practise robbery or plunder.

England was infested with robbers and outlaws, which, lurking in woods, used to break forth to rob and spoil. Spenser.

They which hate us spoil for themselves. Psalms xiv. 14.

2. To grow useless; to be corrupted.
 He that gathered an hundred bushels of acorns or apples, had thereby a property in them: he was only to look that he used them before they spoiled, else he robbed others. Locke.

SPOIL. n. f. [spolium, Latin.]

1. That which is taken by violence; that which is taken from an enemy; plunder; pillage; booty.

The cry of Talbot serves me for a sword;
 For I have loaden me with many spoils,
 Using no other weapon but his name. Shakspeare's Henry VI.

2. That which is gained by strength or effort.

But grant our hero's hopes long toil
 And comprehensive genius crown,
 Each science and each art his spoils,
 Yet what reward, or what renown? Bunbury.

X

2. That

3. That which is taken from another.

Gentle gales,
Fanning their odoriferous wings, disperse
Native perfumes, and whisper whence they stole Those balmy spoils. Milton.

4. The act of robbery; robbery; waste.

The man that hath not musick in himself,
Nor is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils. Shaksp.
Too late, alas! we find

The softness of thy sword, continued through thy foil,

To be the only cause of unrecover'd spoils. Drayton
Go and speed!

Havock, and spoil, and ruin are my gain. Milton.

5. Corruption; cause of corruption.

Company, villainous company, hath been the spoil of me. Shaksp.

Snakes, the rather for the casting of their spoil, live till they be old. Bacon.

SPOILER. n. f. [from spoil.]

1. A robber; a plunderer; a pillager.

Such ruin of her manners Rome
Doth suffer now, as she's become Both her own spoiler and own prey. Ben Jonson's Cataline.

Providence, where it loves a nation, concerns itself to own and assert the interest of religion, by blasting the spoilers of religious persons and places. South.

Came you then here, thus far, thro' waves, to conquer,

To waste, to plunder, out of mere compassion?
Is it humanity that prompts you on?
Happy for us, and happy for you spoilers,
Had your humanity ne'er reach'd our world!
A. Philips.

2. One who mars or corrupts any thing.

SPOILFUL. adj. [from spoil and full.] Wasteful;
rapacious.

facto, and sometimes de facto, and not de jure, when a man suffers a spoliation by his own act. Ayliffe's Parergon.

SPONDER. n. f. [spondie, French; spon-daus, Latin.] A foot of two long syllables.

We see in the choice of the words the weight of the spondee, and the striving to heave it up the mountain: Homer clogs the verse with spondes, and leaves the vowels open. Brown.

SPONDYLE. n. f. [spondylus, Fr. spon-dylus, Latin.] A vertebra; a joint of the spine.

It bath for the spine or back-bone a cartilagi-

SPONGE. n. f. [spongia, Latin.] A soft porous substance, supported by some the-nidus of animals. It is remarkable for sucking up water. It is too often written sponge. See SPUNGE.

Sponges are gathered from the sides of rocks, being as a large but tough moss. Bacon.

They opened and washed part of their sponges.
Sundys.

Great officers are like sponges: they suck till they are full, and, when they come once to be squeezed, their very heart's blood comes away. L'Estrange.

To SPONGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To blot; to wipe away as with a sponge.

Except between the words of translation and the mind of Scripture itself there be contradiction; very little difference should not seem an intolerable blemish necessarily to be sponged out. Hooker.

To SPONGE. v. n. To suck in as a sponge;
to gain by mean arts.

The ant lives upon her own, honestly gotten;
whereas the fly is an intruder, and a common smell-cake, that sponges upon other people's trench-ers. L'Estrange.

Here wont the dean, when he's to seek,
To sponge a breakfast once a week. Swift.

SPONGER. n. f. [from sponge.] One who hangs for a maintenance on others.

A generous rich man, that kept a splendid and open table, would try which were friends, and which only trencher-fires and spongers. L'Estrange.

SPONGINESS. n. f. [from spongy.] Softness, and fulness of cavities, like a sponge.

The lungs are expell'd to receive all the droppings from the brain: a very fit cistern, because of their sponginess. Marney.

SPONGIOUS. adj. [spongieux, French;
from sponge.] Full of small cavities like a sponge.

All thick bones are hollow or spongious, and con-act of becoming surety for another.SPONSOR. n. f. [Latin.] A surety; one who makes a promise or gives security for another.

In the baptism of a male there ought to be two males and one woman, and in the baptism of a female child two women and one man; and these are called sponsors or sureties for their education in the true Christian faith. Ayliffe's Parergon.

The sponsor ought to be of the same station with the person to whom he becomes surety. Brown.

The rash hermit, who with impious pray'r
Had been the sponsor of another's care. Harte.

SPONTANEITY. n. f. [spontaneitas, school
Lat. spontaneité, Fr. from spontaneous.]
Voluntariness; willingness; accord un-compelled.

Necessity and spontaneity may sometimes meet together, so may spontaneity and liberty; but real necessity and true liberty can never.

Strict necessity they simple call;
It binds the will, that things foreknown
By spontaneity, not choice, are done. Dryden.

SPONTANEOUS. adj. [spontané, Fr.
from sponste, Latin.] Voluntary; not compelled; acting without compulsion or restraint; acting of itself; acting of its own accord.

Many analogal motions in animals, though I cannot call them voluntary, yet I see them spontaneous: I have reason to conclude, that these are not simply mechanical. Hale.

They now came forth
Spontaneous; for within them spirit mov'd Attendant on their lord. Milton.

While John for nine-pins does declare,
And Roger loves to pitch the bar,
Both legs and arms spontaneous move,
Which was the thing I meant to prove. Prior.
Begin with ease, of every art the soul,
Parts answering parts shall slide into a whole;
Spontaneous beauties all around advance,
Start ev'n from difficulty, strike from chance;
Nature shall join you, time shall make it grow. Pope.

SPONTANEOUSLY. adv. [from spontaneous.] Voluntarily; of its own accord.

This would be as impossible as that the lead of an edifice should naturally and spontaneously mount up to the roof, while lighter materials employ themselves beneath it. Bentley.

Whey turns spontaneously acid, and the curd into cheese as hard as a stone. Arbutnot on Aliments.

SPONTANEOUSNESS. n. f. [from spontaneous.] Voluntariness; freedom of will;
accord unforced.

The sagacities and instincts of brutes, the spontane-ousness of many of their animal motions, are not explicable, without supposing some active determinate power connexed to and inherent in their spirits, of a higher extraction than the bare natural modification of matter. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

SPOOL. n. f. [spubl, German; spobl, Dut.]
A small piece of cane or reed, with a knot at each end; or a piece of wood ian faith from the time of the apostles, but at this day it is spotted with many absurdities. Albot's Description of the World.

SPOTLESS. adj. [from spot.]

1. Free from spots.

2. Free from reproach or impurity; immaculate; pure; untainted.

So much fairer
And spotless shall mine innocence arise,
When the king knows my truth. Shakespeare.

I dare my life lay down, that the queen is spotless
In th' eyes of Heaven. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

You grac'd the several parts of life,
A spotless virgin, and a faultless wife. Waller.

We sometimes wish that it had been our lot to live and converse with Christ, to hear his divine discourses, and to observe his spotless behaviour; and we please ourselves perhaps with thinking, how ready a reception we should have given to him and his doctrine. Asterbury.

Eternal sunshine of the spotless mind,
Each pray'r accepted, and each wish resign'd. Pope.

SPOTTED. n. f. [from spot.] One that spots; one that maculates.

SPOTTY. adj. [from spot.] Full of spots; maculated.

The moon, we see o b
Through optick glass the artist art views
In Valombrosa to descry the hands, Rivers, or mountains, on his petty globe. Milton.

SPOUSAL. adj. [from spouse.] Nuptial; matrimonial; conjugal; connubial; bridal.

There still we consummate our spousal rites. Shakespeare.

These chaste kifs wrongs no more joy's maidenhead, Shakespeare.

Spousal rites prejudice the marriage bed. Crowder.

...in her prime of love,
...vibrated with gold. Milton.

Sleep'st thou, careless of the nuptial day?
Thy spousal ornament neglected lies;
Arise, prepare the bridal train, arise. Pope's Odyssey.

SPOUSAL. n. f. [spousailles, Fr. sponsalia, Lat.] Marriage; nuptials.

As man and wife, being two, are one in love,
So be there 'twixt your kingdoms such a spousal,
That never may ill office, or fell jealousy,
Thrust in between the paction of these kingdoms,
To make divorce of their incorporate league. Shak.

The amorous bird of night
Sung spousal, and bid haste the ev'ning star,
On his hill top to light the bridal lamp. Milton.

The spousals of Hippolita the queen,
What tilts and tourneys at the feast were seen! Dryden.

Ætherial musick did her death prepare,
Like joyful sounds of spousals in the air;
A radiant light did her crown'd temples gild. Dryden.

SPOUSE. n. f. [spousa, sponsus, Lat. espouse, Fr.] One joined in marriage; a husband or wife.

She is of good esteem;
Beside, to qualified as may becom
The spouse of any noble gentleman. Shakespeare.

At once, Farewell, O faithful spouse! they said;
At once th' encroaching rinds their closing lips invade. Dryden.

SPOUSED. adj. [from the noun.] Wedded; espoused; joined together as in matrimony.

They led the vine
To wed her elm; the spous'd about him twines
Her marriageable arms. Milton.

SPOUSELESS. adj. [from spouse.] Wanting a husband or wife.

To tempt the spouseless queen with am'rous wiles,
Reform the nobles from the neighb'ring isles. Pope.

SPOUT. n. f. [from spout, Dutch.]

1. A pipe, or mouth of a pipe or vessel, out of which any thing is poured.

She gaping to begin some speech, her eyes Became two spouts. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

In whales that breathe, lest the water should get unto the lungs, an exhalation thereof is contrived by a fistula or spout in the head. Brown's Vulg. Err.

If you chance it to lack,
Be it claret or sack,
I'll make this spout
To deal it about,
Or this to run out,
As it were from a spout. Ben Jonson.

As waters did in storms, now pitch runs out,
As lead, when a fir'd church becomes one spout. Donne.

In Gaza they couch vessels of earth in their walls, to gather the wind from the top, and to pass it down in spouts into rooms. Bacon.

Let the water be fed by some higher than the pool, and delivered into it by fair spouts, and then discharged by some equality of bores, that it stay little. Bacon.

In this single cathedral, the very spouts are loaded with ornaments. Addison on Italy.

From silver spouts the grateful liquors glide,
And China's earth receives the smoking tide. Pope.

2. Water falling in a body; a cataract, such as is seen in the hot climates, when clouds sometimes discharge all their water at once.

Not the dreadful spout,
Which shipmen do the hurricane call,
Constr'd in mass by the almighty sun,
Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear
In his descent, than shall my prompted sword Falling on Dismode. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

The force of these motions pressing more in some places than in others, there would fall not showers, but great spouts or cascades of water. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

To SPOUT. v. a. [from the noun.] To pour with violence, or in a collected body... as from a spout.

We will bear home that lusty blood again,
Which here we came to spout against your town. Shakespeare.

I intend two fountains, the one that sprinkleth or spouteth water, the other a fair receipt of water. Bacon.

She swims in blood, and blood does spouting throw
To heav'n, that heav'n men's cruelties might know. Waller.

Next on his belly floats the mighty whale;
He twists his back, and rears his throat'ning tail:
He spouts the tide. Creek.

To SPOUT. v. n. To issue as from a spout.

They laid them down hard by the murmuring musick of certain waters, which spouted out of the side of the hills. Sidney.

No hands could force it thence, so fixt it stood,
Till out it rush'd, expell'd by streams of spouting blood. Dryden.

It spouts up out of deep wells, and flies forth at the tops of them, upon the face of the ground. Woodward.

All the glittering hill
Is bright with spouting rills. Thomson's Autumn.

SPRAC. adj. Vigorous; spritely. A provincial word.

A good sprag memory. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

To SPRAIN. v. a. [corrupted from strain.]

To stretch the ligaments of a joint without dislocation of the bone.

Should the big last extend the shoe too wide,
The sudden turn may stretch the swelling vein,
Thy cracking joint unhinge, or ankle sprain. Gay.

SPRAIN. n. f. [from the verb.] Extension of the ligaments without dislocation of the joint.

I was in pain, and thought it was with some sprain at tennis. Temple.

SPRAINTS. n. f. The dung of an otter.

SPRANG. The preterite of spring.

Mankind sprang from one common original;
whence this tradition would be universally diffused. Tillotson.

SPRAT. n. f. [sprat, Dutch; sarda, Lat.]

A small sea fish.
So oft, in feasts with costly changes clad,
To crammed maws a sprat new stomach brings. Sidney.

All saints do lay for porke and sowse,
For sprats and spurlings for their house. Tusser.

Of round fish there are brit, sprat, barn, smelt. Carr.

To SPRAWL. v. n. [spradle, Danish; spartelen, Dutch.]

1. To struggle, as in the convulsions of death.

Hang the child, that he may see it sprawl;
A sight to vex the father's soul. Shakespeare.

Some lie sprawling on the ground,
With many a gasp and bloody wound. Hudibras.

2. To tumble or creep with much agitation and contortion of the limbs.

The birds were not fledged; but, upon sprawling and struggling to get clear of the flame, down they tumbled. L'Estrange.

Telamon hap'd to meet
A rising root that held his father's feet;
So down he fell, whom sprawling on the ground
His brother from the wooden gyves unbound. Dryden.

Hence, long before the child can crawl,
He learns to kick, and wiggle, and sprawl. Prior.

Did the stars do this feat once only, which gave beginning to human race? who were there then in the world, to observe the births of those first men, and calculate their nativities, as they sprawled out of ditches? Bentley.

He ran, he leapt into a flood,
There spread a while, and scarce got out,
All cover'd o'er with slime. Swift
SPRAY. n. s. [of the same race with sprout and sprout.]

1. The extremity of a branch.

At light whereof each bird that sits on spray,
And every beast that to his den was fled,
Come forth afresh out of their late dismay,
And to the light lift up their drooping head.

Hubbard's Tale.

Thus droops this lofty pine, and hangs his sprays,
Thus Eleanor's pride dies in her young days.

Shakespeare.

The wind that whistles through the sprays
Maintains the comfort of the song;
And hidden birds, with native lays,
The golden sleep prolong. Dryden.

2. The foam of the sea, commonly written spry.

Winds raise some of the salt with the spray.
Arbushnot.

To SPREAD. v. a. [ppneban, Sax. spreyden, Dutch.]

2 Sam. xxi.

Faire attendants then

The sheets and bedding of the man of men,
Within a cabin of the hollow keels,
Spread and made soft. Chapman

Make the trees more tall, more spread, and more hasty, than they use to be. Bacon's Natural History.
Silver spread into plates is brought from Tarsish.

Jer. x.

Shall funeral eloquence her colours spread,
And scatter roses on the wealthy dead? Young

2. To cover by extension.

Her cheeks their freshness lose and wonted grace,
And an unusual paleness spread her face. Granv.

3. To cover over.

The workman melteth a graven image, and the goldsmith spreadeth it over with gold. Isaiah, xl. 19.

4. To stretch; to extend.

Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hair.
Shakespeare.

He arose from kneeling, with his hands spread up to heaven, and he blessed the congregation.
1 Kings, viii. 54

The stately trees fast spread their branches.
Milton.

Deep in a rich alcove the prince was laid,
Fast by his side Prostratus lay spread,
In age his equal, on a splendid bed. Pope.

They, when departed, spread abroad his fame in all that count y. Matthew, ix. 31.

6. To emit as effluvia or emanations; to diffuse.

Their course thro' thickest constellations held,
They spread their bane. Mil on.

To SPREAD. v. n. To extend or expand itself.

Can any understand the spreading of the clouds, or the noise of his tabernacle? Job, xxxvi. 29.

The princes of Germany had but a dull fear of the greatness of Spain, upon a general apprehension only of their spreading and ambitious designs.
Bacon.

Plants, if they spread much, are seldom tall.
Bacon.

Great Pan, who went to chase the fair,
And lov'd the spreading oak, was there. Add. Caro.

The valley opened at the farther end, spreading forth into an immense ocean. Addison.

SPREAD. n. s. [from the verb.]

and am already ploughing up some, fencing others.
Addison.

2. Expansion of parts.

No flower hath that spread of the woodbind.
Bacon.

SPREADER. n. s. [from spread.]

1. One that spreads.

By conforming our lives, we should be spreaders of a worse infection than any we are likely to draw from papists, by our conformity with them in ceremonies. Hooker.

2. Publisher; divulger; disseminator.

It is be a mistake, I desire I may not be accused for a spreader of false news. Swift

SPRENT. part. [from sprene, to sprinkle;
ppnenzan, ppnenan, Saxon; sprengen, Dutch.] Sprinkled. Obsolete.

O lips, that kiss'd that hand with my tears sprent.
Keats.

SPRIG. n. s. [ysbrig, Welsh; so Davies:
but it is probably of the same race with spring.] A small branch; a spray.

The substance is true ivy; after it is taken down, the friends of the family are desirous to have some spring to keep. Bacon.

Out chilling climate hardly bears

A spring of bays in fifty years,

While every foot his claim alleges,

As if it grew in common hedges. Swift.

SPRIG Chrysal. n. s.

In perpendicular fissures, chrysal is found in form of an hexangular column, adhering at one end to the stone, and near the other lessening gradually, till it terminates in a point; this is called by lapidaries spring or rock chrysal. Woodward

SPRINGY. adj. [from spring.] Full of small branches.

SPRIGHT. n. s. [contraction of spirit;
spiritus, Latin. It was anciently written sprate or spryte; and spiris, as now written, was long considered in verse as a monosyllable: this word should therefore be spelled sprite, and its derivatives spritely, spritsful; but custom has determined otherwise.]

1. Spirit; shade; soul; incorporeal agent.

She doth display
The gate with pearls and rubies richly dight, Through which her words to wise do make their way,

To bear the message of her sprights. Spenser.

Forth he called out of deep darkness dread
Legions of sprights, the which, like little flies

Flurrying about his ever dammed head, Await where'er their service he applies. Fa. Queen.

While with heav'nly charity she spoke,
A streaming blaze the silent shadows broke;

The birds obscene to forests wing'd their flight,
And gaping graves receiv'd the guilty sprights. Dry.

Of these am I who thy protection claim;
A watchful sprite, and Ariel is my name. Pope.

2. Walking spirit; apparition.

The ideas of goblins and sprights have no more to do with darkness than light; yet let but a foolish maid inculcate these often on the mind of a child, possibly he shall never be able to separate them again. Locke.

3. Power which gives cheerfulness or courage.

O chastity! the chief of heav'nly lights,
Which mak'st us most immortal shape to wear,

Hold thou my heart, establish thou my sprights;
To only thee my constant course I bear,

Till spotless soul unto thy bosom fly;
Such life to lead, such death I vow to die. Sidney.

4. An arrow. Not in use.

We had in use for sea fight short arrows called sprights, without any other heads save wood sharpened; which were discharged out of muskets, and would pierce through the sides of ships where a bullet would not. Bacon's Natural History.

To SPRIGHT. v. a. To haunt as a spright.
A ludicrous use.

I am sprighted with a fool. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.

SPRIGHTFUL. adj. [spright and full.]

The spirit of the time shall teach me speed.

— Spoke like a sprightful noble gentleman. Shakespeare.

Steeds sprightful as the light. Cowley.

Happy my eyes when they behold thy face;
My heavy heart will leave its doleful beating

At sight of thee, and bound with sprightful joys.

SPRIGHTFULLY. adv. [from sprightful.]

Briskly; vigorously.

Nor do, sprightfully and bold,

Says but the common of the appellant's trumpet.
Shakespeare.

SPRIGHTLY. s. adj. [from spright.] Dull;
enervated; sluggish.

Are you grown

Benumb'd with fear, or virtue's sprightless cold? Cowley.

SPRIGHTLINESS. n. s. [from sprightly.]

Liveliness; briskness; vigour; gaiety;
vivacity.

The soul is clogged when she acts in conjunction with a companion to heavy; but, in dreams, observe with what a sprightliness and alacrity does she exert herself. Addison.

SPRIGHTLY. adj. [from sprights.] Gay; brisk; lively; vigorous; airy; vivacious.

Produce the wine that makes us bold,

And sprightly wit and love inspires. Dryden.

When now the sprightly trumpet, from afar,
Had giv'n the signal of approaching war. Dryden.

Each morn they wak'd me with a sprightly lay;
Of opening heav'n they sung, and glad some day.

Prior.

The sprightly Sylvia trips along the green;
She runs, but hopes she does not run unseen. Pope.

To SPRING. v. n. preterite sprung or sprang, anciently sprong; part. sprung. [ppniazan, Sax. springen, Dutch.]

1. To arise out of the ground, and grow, by vegetative power.

All blest secrets,
All you unpublish'd virtues of the earth,
Spring with my tears; be aidant and remediate

In the good man's distress. Shakespeare.

To his musick plants and flowers

Ever sprung, as sun and showers

There had made a lasting spring. Sb. Hen. VIII.

To satisfy the desolate ground, and cause the bud of the tender herb to spring forth.

Job, xxxviii. 27.

Other fall on good ground, and did yield fruit that sprung up and increased. Mark, iv. 8.

Tell me, in what happy fields

The thistle springs, to which the lily yields? Pope

2. To begin to grow.

That the nipples should be made with such perforations as to admit passage to the milk when drawn, otherwise to retain it; and the teeth of the young not sprung, are effects of providence.

Ray.

3. To proceed as from seed.

Ye shall eat this year such things as grow of themselves; and in the second year that which springs of the same. 2 Kings.

Much more good of sin shall spring. Milton.

4. To come into existence; to issue forth.

Hadst thou sway'd as kings should do,
Giving no ground unto the house of York,

They never then had sprung like summer flies.

Shakespeare.

Ev'n thought meets thought, ere from the lips it
part,

And each warm wish springs mutual from the heart.
Pope.

5. To arise; to appear; to begin to appear, or to exist.

When the day began to spring, they let her go. Judges.

To them which sat in the region and shadow of death, light is sprung up. Matthew, iv. 16.

Fly, fly, prophane togs! far hence fly away,
Taint not the pure streams of the springing day
With your dull influence: it is for you
To sit and scoule upon night's heavy brow. Croft.

Do not blast my springing hopes,
Which thy kind hand has planted in my soul. Roscoe.

6. To issue with effect or force.

Swift fly the years, and rife thy expected morn!
Oh spring to light, auspicious babe, be born! Pope.

7. To proceed as from ancestors, or a country.

How youngly he began to serve his country,
How long continued, and what stock he *spring*s of,
The noble house of Marcius. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.
Our Lord sprang out of Judea. Hub. vii. 14.

All these
Shall, like the brethren spring of dragon's teeth, Ruin each other, and he fall amongst 'em. B. Jonf.
Heroes of old, by rapine and by spoil,
In search of fame did all the world embroil,
Thus to their gods each then allied his name,
Thus spring from Jove, and that from Titan came. Gravina.

8. To proceed as from a ground, cause, or reason.

They found new hope to spring
Out of despair. Milton.
Some have been deceived into an opinion, that the inheritance of rule over men, and property in things, spring from the same original, and descend by the same rules. Locke.

9. To grow; to thrive.

What makes all this but Jupiter the king,
At whose command we perish and we spring?
Thou 'tis our bell, since thus ordain'd to die,
To make a virtue of necessity. Dryd. Knight's Tale.

10. To bound; to leap; to jump; to rush hastily; to appear suddenly.

Some strange commotion
Is in his brain, he bites his lip, and starts;
Steps on a sudden, looks upon the ground,
Then lays his finger on his temple; straight
*Spring*s out into tall gait, then stops again. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

I spring not more in joy at first hearing he was a man, than now in first seeing he had proved himself a man. Shakspeare.

He called for a light, and sprang in, and fell before Paul. Acts.

When heav'n was nam'd, they loos'd their hold
On earth, and then spring the south, they follow'd her again. Dryden.

Afraid to sleep,
Her blood all revel'd, with a furious leap
She sprang from bed. Dryden.

Not lies she long; but, as her fates ordain,
*Spring*s up to life; and, fresh to second pain,
Is forc'd to-day, to-morrow to be slain. Dryden.

See, aw'd by heav'n, the blooming Hebrew flies
Her awful tongue, and more perfusive eyes;
And, springing from the disappointed arms,
Prefers a dungeon to the hidden charms. Blackm.

The mountain flax *spring*s
From height to height, as bounds along the plains
Nor has a master to restrain his course,
That mountain flax would Vauoe rather be Than be a slave. Philips: Briton.

11. To fly with elastic power; to start.

A spring of his hair, that will easily slip, when to the seat of the sick that *spring*s. Mort. Husband.

To rise from a covert.

My doors are hateful to my eyes,
And I am tum'd up with gaping creditors,
As fowls when their game will spring. Orway.

A covey of partridges springing in our front, put our infantry in disorder. Addison.

13. To issue from a fountain.

Israel's servants digged in the valley, and found a well of springing water. Gen. xvi. 19.

Let the wide world his praises sing,
Where Tagus and Euphrates spring;
And from the Danube's frosty banks to those Where from an unknown head great Nilus flows. Recommon.

14. To proceed as from a source.

'Tis true from force the noblest title *spring*s,
I therefore hold from that which first made kings. Dryden.

15. To shoot; to issue with speed and violence.

Then shook the sacred shrine, and sudden light
Spring thro' the vaulted roof, and made the temple bright:

The pow'r, behold! the pow'r in glory shone,
By her bent bow and her keen arrows known. Dryden.

The friendly gods a springing gale enlarg'd,
The fleet swift tilting o'er the surges flew,
Till Grecian cliffs appear'd. Pope.

TO SPRING. v. a.

1. To start; to rouse game.

Thus I reclaim'd my buzzard love to fly
At what, and when, and how, and where I chose,
Now negligent of sport I lie;
And now, as other fawceners use,
I spring a mistress, swear, write, sigh, and die;
And the game kill'd, or lost, go talk or lie. Donne.

That spring the game you were to set,
Before you 'd time to draw the net. Hudibras.

A large cock pheasant he *spring*s in one of the neighbouring woods. Addison's Spectator.

Here I use a great deal of diligence before I can spring any thing; whereas in town, whilst I am following one character, I am crossed by another, that they puzzle the chase. Addison.

See how the well-taught pointer leads the way!
The scent grows warm; he stops, he *spring*s the prey. Gay.

2. To produce quickly or unexpectedly.

The nurse, surpris'd with sight,
Starts up and leaves her bed, and *spring*s a light. Dryden.

Thus man by his own strength to heav'n would soar,

And would not be oblig'd to God for more:
Vain, wretched creature, how art thou misled,
To think thy wit these godlike notions bred!
These truths are not the product of thy mind,
But dropt from heav'n, and of a nobler kind:
Reveal'd religion first inform'd thy sight,
And reason saw not, till faith *spring*s the light. Dryden.

He that has such a burning zeal, and *spring*s such mighty discoveries, must needs be an admirable patriot. Colleton.

3. To make by starting; applied to a ship.

People discharge themselves of burdensome reflections, as of the cargo of a ship that has *spring*d a leak. L'Estrange.

No more accuse thy pen; but charge the crime
On native sloth, and negligence of time:

Beware the publick laughter of the town,
Thou *spring*st a leak already in thy crown. Dryd.

Whether the spring a leak, I cannot find,
Or whether she was overfet with wind,
But down at once with all her crew she went. Dryden.

4. To discharge; applied to a mine.

Our miners discovered several of the enemies mines, who have *spring*d divers others which did little execution. Tatler.

I *spring*d a mine, whereby the whole nest was overthrown. Addison's Spectator.

5. To contrive on a sudden; to produce hastily; to offer unexpectedly.

The friends to the cause *spring*d a new project;
and it was advertised that the Crisis could not appear, till the ladies had shown their seal against the Pretender. Swift.

pear, till the ladies had shown their seal against the Pretender. Swift.

6. To pass by leaping. A barbarous use.

Unbecoming skill

To spring the fence, to win the prancing steed. Thomson.

7. Of the verb spring the primary sense is to grow out of the ground: so plants spring, thence spring for the season; so water *spring*s, thence spring for a fountain. Plants rise unexpectedly, and waters break out violently; thence any thing done suddenly, or coming hastily, is said to spring; thence spring means an elastic body. Thus the active significations all import suddenness or force.

SPRING. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The season in which plants rise and vegetate; the vernal season.

Orpheus with his lute made trees,
And the mountain-tops that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing:
To his music plants and flowers
Ever spring, as fun and showers
There had made a lasting spring. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

The spring visiteth not their quarters so timely as the eastern parts. Carew.

Come, gentle spring, ethereal mildness, come,
And from the bosom of yon dropping cloud
Upon our plains descend. Thomson's Spring.

2. An elastic body; a body which, when distorted, has the power of restoring itself to its former state.

This may be performed by the strength of some such spring as is used in watches: this spring may be applied to one wheel, which shall give an equal motion to both the wheels. Wilkin.

The spring must be made of good steel, will tempered; and the wider the two ends of the spring stand asunder, the milder it throws the chape of the vice open. Muson's Mechan. Exercises.

He that was sharp-sighted enough to see the configuration of the minute particles of the spring of a clock, and upon what peculiar impulse its elastic motion depends, would no doubt discover something very admirable. Locke.

3. Elastic force.

Heav'n's, what a spring was in his arm, to throw!
How high he held his shield, and rose at ev'ry blow! Dryden.

Bodies which are absolutely hard, or so soft as to be void of elasticity, will not rebound from one another: impenetrability makes them only stop. If two equal bodies meet directly in vacuum, they will by the laws of motion stop where they meet, lose their motion, and remain in rest; unless they be elastic, and receive new motion
from their spring. Newton.

The soul is gathered within herself, and recovers that spring, which is weakened when the operates more in concert with the body. Addison.

In adult persons, when the fibres cannot any more yield, they must break, or lose their spring. Arbutnot.

4. Any active power; any cause by which motion or action is produced or propagated.

My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,
And every slacken'd fibre drops its hold,
Like nature letting down the *spring*s of life;
So much the name of father awes me still. Dryd.

Nature is the same, and man is the same, has the same affections and passions; and the same *spring*s that give them motion. Rymr.

Our author stuns by vulgar *spring*s to move. Pope.

5. A leap; a bound; a jump; a violent effort; a sudden struggle.

The prisoner with a spring from prison broke;
Then stretch'd his feather'd fans with all his might,
And to the neighb'ring maple wing'd his flight. Dry.

With

With what a spring his furious limb broke loose,
And left the limbs still quivering on the ground!
Addison's Cato.

6. A leak; a start of a plank.

Each petty hand
Can steer a ship becalm'd; but he that will Govern, and carry her to her end, must know
His tides, his currents; how to shift his sails;
Where her *spring*s are, her leaks, and how to stop
'em.
Ben Jonson's Carstone.

7. A fountain; an issue of water from the earth.

Now stop thy *spring*s; my sea shall suck them dry,
And swell so much the higher by their ebb.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.
Springs on the tops of hills, pass through a great deal of pure earth, with less mixture of other waters.
Bacon's Nat. History.

When in th' effects she doth the causes know,
And seeing the stream, thinks where the spring doth rise;

And seeing the branch, conceives the root below;
These things she views without the body's eyes.

He adds the running *spring*s and standing lakes,
And bounding banks for winding rivers makes.
Dryden.

Nile hears him knocking at his sevenfold gates,
And seeks his hidden spring, and fears his nephews fates.
Dryden.

He bathed himself in cold spring water in the midst of winter.
Locke.

The water that falls down from the clouds, sinking into beds of rock or clay, breaks out in *spring*s, commonly at the bottom of hilly ground.
Locke.

8. A source; that by which any thing is supplied.

To that great spring which doth great kingdoms move,

The sacred spring whence right and honour streams;
Distilling virtue, shedding peace and love
In every place, as Cynthia sheds her beams.
Dav.

I move, I see, I speak, discourse, and know;
Though now I am, I was not always so:
Then that from which I was must be before,
Whom, as my spring of being, I adore.
Dryden.

Rolling down through so many barbarous ages,
from the spring of Virgil, it bears along with it the filth of the Goths and Vandals.
Dryden.

He has a secret spring of spiritual joy, and the continual feast of a good conscience within, that forbids him to be miserable.
Bentley.

9. Rise; beginning.

About the spring of the day, Samuel called Saul to the top of the house.
1 Sam. ix. 26.

10. Cause; original.

The reason of the quicker or slower termination of this distemper, arises from these three *spring*s.
Blackmore.

The first *spring*s of great events, like those of great rivers, are often mean and little.
Swift.

SPRING.

SPRINGAL. } n. f. A youth. Obsolete.

Before the bull she pictur'd winged love,
With his young brother sport, light fluttering
Upon the waves, as each had been a dove;
The one his bow and shafts, the other spring
A burning tead about his head did move,
As in their fire's new love both triumphing.
Spens.

SPRINGOE. n. f. [from spring.] A gin; a noose which, fastened to any elastic body, catches by a spring or jerk.

A. a woodcock to my own spring, Ofuck,
I'm justly kill'd with mine own treachery.
Shak.
Let goats for food their loaded udders lend;
But neither *spring*s, nets, nor snares employ.
Dryden.

With hairy *spring*s we the birds betray,
Slight lines of hair surprise the finny prey.
Pope.

SPRINGER. n. f. [from spring.] One who rouses game.

SPRINGINESS. n. f. [from springy.] Elasticity; power of restoring itself.

Where there is a continued endeavour of the parts of a body to put themselves into another state, the progress may be much more slow; since it was a great while before the texture of the corpuscles of the steel were so altered as to make them lose their former springiness.
Boyle.

The air is a thin fluid body, endowed with elasticity, and springiness, capable of condensation and rarefaction.
Bentley.

SPRINGHALT. n. f. [from spring and halt.]

A lameness by which the horse twitches up his legs.

They've all new legs, and lame ones; one would take it,

That never saw them pace before, the spavin
And springhalt reign'd among them.
Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

SPRINGLE. n. f. [from spring.] A spring; a an elastic noose.

Woodcocks arrive first on the north coast where every plash-shoot ferveth for springles to take them.
Carver.

To SPRINGLE. v. a. Misprinted, I suppose, for sprinkle.

This is Timon's last,
Who, stuck and spangled with your flatteries,
Washes it off, and springles in your faces
Your racking villany.
Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.

SPRINGTIDE. n. f. [from spring and tide.]

Tide at the new and full moon; high tide.

Love, like springtides, full and high,
Swells in every youthful vein;
But each tide does let supply,
Till they quite shrink in again:
It a flow in age appears,
'Tis but tain, and runs not clear.
Dryden's Tyrannick Love.

Most people die when the moon chiefly reigns;
that is, in the night, or upon or near a springtide.
Grew's Cosmologia.

SPRINGY. adj. [from spring.]

1. Elastic; having the power of restoring itself.

Had not the Maker wrought the springy frame,
Such as it is, to fan the vital flame,
The blood, defrauded of its nitrous food,
Had cool'd and languish'd in th' arterial road;
While the tir'd heart had strove, with fruitless pain,
To push the lazy tide along the vein.
Blackmore's Creation.

This vast contraction and expansion seems unintelligible, by feigning the particles of air to be springy and ramous, or rolled up like hoops, or by any other means than a repulsive power.
Newton.

Though the bundle of fibres which constitute the muscles may be small, the fibres may be strong and springy.
A. Haller.

If our air had not been a springy body, no animal could have exercised the very function of respiration; and yet the ends of respiration are not served by that springiness, but by some other unknown quality.
Bentley's Sermons.

2. [from spring.] Full of *spring*s or fountains. Not used.

Where the sandy or gravelly lands are springy or wet, rather marl them for grass than corn.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

To SPRINKLE. v. a. [from sprinkelen, Dut.]

1. To scatter; to disperse in small masses.

Take handfuls of ashes of the turnace, and let Moses sprinkle it towards the heaven. Ex. ix. 8.

2. To scatter in drops.

Sprinkle water of purifying upon them.
Num. viii. 7.

3. To besprinkle; to wash, wet, or dult by sprinkling.

Let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience.
Hebrews.

Wings he wore
Of many a colour'd plume sprinkled with gold. Mil.

The prince with living water sprinkled o'er
His limbs and body; then approach'd the door,
Possess'd the porch.
Dryden's Æneid.

To SPRINKLE. v. n. To perform the act of scattering in small drops.

The priest shall sprinkle of the oil with his finger.
Lev. xiv.

Baptism may well enough be performed by sprin- kling, or effusion of water.
Ayliffe's Paragon.

When dextrous damsels twirl the sprinkling mop,
And cleanse the spatter'd sash, and scrub the stairs, Know Saturday appears.
Gay's Trivia.

SPRINKLER. n. f. [from sprinkle.] One that sprinkles.

To SPRIT. v. a. [from springen, Sax. spruy- ten, Dutch.] To throw out; to eject with force. Commonly spirt.

Toads sometimes exclude or spirt out a dark and liquid matter behind, and a venomous condition there may be perhaps therein; but it cannot be called their urine.
Broton.

To SPRIT. v. n. [from springen, Sax. spruy- ten, Dutch.] To shoot; to germinate; to spout. Used of barley wetted for malt.

SPRIT. n. f. [from the verb.] Shoot;
spout.

The barley, after it has been couched four days, will sweat a little, and shew the chit or spirt at the root-end of the corn.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

SPRITSAIL. n. f. [from spirt and sail.] The sail which belongs to the boltsprit mast.
Diet.

Our men quitted themselves of the fireship, by cutting the spirtsail tackle off with their short hatchets.
Wijeman.

SPRITE. n. f. [contracted from spirit.] A spirit; an incorporeal agent.

The sprites of fiery tortuagants in flame
Mount up, and take a salamander's name.
Pope.

SPRITFULLY. adv. [See SPRIGHT-
FULLY.] Vigorously; with life and ardour.

The Grecians spritefully drew from the darts the corse,

And heard it, hearing it to fleet.
Chapman's Iliad.

SPRITELY. adv. [from sprite.] Gaily.

You have not seen young heifers, highly kept,
Fill'd full of daisies at the field, and driven Home to their hovels; all to spritefully given,
That no room can contain them.
Chapman.

SPRONG. The preterite of spring. Obsolete.

Not mistrusting, till these new curiosities sprung up, that ever any man would think our labour herein mispent, or the time wastefully consumed.
Hosker.

To SPROUT. v. n. [from springen, Saxon;
spruyten, Dutch. Sprout, spirt, and by a very frequent transposition spirt or spurt, are all the same word.

1. To shoot by vegetation; to germinate.

The sprouting leaves that saw you here,
And call'd their fellows to the light.
Cervely.

Try whether these things in the sprouting do increase weight, by weighing them before they are hanged up; and afterwards again, when they are sprouted.
Baron.

That leaf faded, but the young buds sprouted on, which afterwards opened into fair leaves.
Bacon's Natural History.

We find no security to prevent germination, having made trial of grains, whose ends, cut off,
have notwithstanding sprouted.
Brown's Vulg. Er.

Old Baucis is by old Philemon seen
Sprouting with sudden leaves of brightly green.
Dryden.

Hence sprouting plants enrich the plain and wood;
For phytick some, and some design'd for food.
Blackmore.

Sprout

Envi'd Britannia, sturdy as the oak
Which on her mountain top she proudly bears,
Blades the ex, and sprouts against the stroke,
Strong from her wounds, and greater by her wars.

Pride.

Rub malt between your hands to get the come or sprouting clean away. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. To shoot into ramifications.

Violol is apt to sprout with moisture. Bacon.

3. To grow.

The enliv'ning dust its head begins to rear,
And on the after sprouting plumes appear. Tickel.

SPROUT. n. f. [from the verb.] A shoot of a vegetable.

Stumps of trees, lying out of the ground, will put forth sprouts for a time. Bacon.

Early, ere the odorous breath of morn,
Awakes the slumbering leaves, or tassell'd horn
Shakes the high thicker, haste I all about,
Number my ranks, and visit every sprout. Milton.

To this kid, taken out of the womb, were brought in the tender sprouts of shrubs; and, after it had tasted, it began to eat of such as are the usual food of goats. Ray on the Creation.

SPROUTS. n. f. pl. [from sprout.] Young coleworts.

SPRUCE. adj. [Skinner derives this word from preux, French; but he proposes it with hesitation: Junius thinks it comes from sprout. Cusaubon trifles yet more contemptibly. I know not whence to deduce it, except from pruce. In ancient books we find furniture of pruce a thing costly and elegant, and thence probably came spruce.] Nice; trim; neat without elegance. It was anciently used of things with a serious meaning; it is now used only of persons, and with levity.

The tree
That wraps that crystal in a wooden tomb,
Shall be took up spruce, fill'd with diamond. Donne.
Thou wilt not leave me in the middle street,
Tho' some more spruce companion thou dost meet. Donne.

Along the crisped shades and bow'rs
Revels the spruce and jocund spring;
The graces, and the rosy-bosom'd hours,
Thither all their beauties bring. Milton.

I must not slip into too spruce a style for serious matters; and yet I approve not that dull and way of writing practised by many christians. Bye.

He put his hand and beard in order,
The sprucer to account and board her. Hudibras.
He is so spruce, that he can never be gentle. Tatler.

This Tim makes a strange figure with that ragged coat under his livery. Can't he go spruce and clean? Arbustnot.

TO SPRUCE. v. n. [from the noun.] To dress with affected neatness.

SPRUCE. n. f. A species of fir.

SPRUCEBER. n. f. [from spruce, a kind of fir.] Beer unctured with branches of fir.

In ulcers of the kidneys, spruceber is a good balsamick. Arbustnot.

SPRUCELEATHER. n. f. [corrupted for Prussian leather.] Arbustnot.

The leather was of Prussia. Dryden's Fables.

SPRUCELY. adv. [from spruce.] In a nice manner.

SPRUCENESS. n. f. [from spruce.] Neatness without elegance.

SPRUNG. The preterite and participle passive of spring.

Tall Norway fir their masts in battle spent,
And English oaks sprung leaks and planks below. Dryden.

Now from beneath Admetus' airy height
Aloft the spring, and fair'd to Thebes her flight.

Pope.

Who spring from kings shall know less joy than I.

Pope.

SPRUNT. n. f. Any thing that is short,
and will not easily bend.

SPUD. n. f. A short knife; any short thick thing, in contempt.

My love to Sheelah is more firmly fixt
Than strongest weeds that grow these stones betwixt;
My spud these nettles from the stones can part,
No knife so keen to weed thee from my heart.

Swift.

SPU'ILERS of Yarn. n. f. [perhaps properly spoolers.] Are such as are employed to see that it be well spun, and fit for the loom. DiA.

SPUME. n. f. [spuma, Lat.] Foam; froth.

Materials dark and crude,
Of spirituous and fiery spume, till touch'd
With heaven's ray, and temper'd, they shoot forth
So beauteous, op'ning to the ambient light. Milt.
Waters frozen in pans, after their dissolution, leave a froth and spume upon them, which are caused by the airy part dissolved by the congelable mixture. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO SPUME. v. n. [spumo, Latin.] To foam; to froth.

SPU'MOUS. adj. [spumeus, Latin; from SPU'MY } the noun.] Frothy; foamy.

The cause is the putrefaction of the body by unnatural heat: the putrefying parts suffer a turgescence, and becoming airy and spumous, ascend unto the surface of the water. Brown.

Now with more madness, rolling from afar,
The many waves proclaim the wat'ry war;
And mounting upwards with a noisy roar,
March onwards, and insult the rocky shore. Dryd.
The spumous and fluid state of the blood, in passing through the lungs, arises from its own eluctations, and its violent motion, the aerial particles expanding themselves. Arbustnot.

SPUN. The preterite and part. pass. of spin.

The nymph nor spun, nor die'd with artful pride,
Her vest was gather'd up, her hair was tied. Addis.

SPUNGE. n. f. [spongia, Lat.] A sponge.

See SPONGE.
When he nee is what you have gleaned, it is but squeezing you, and, sponges, you shall be dry again. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Considering the motion it was impressed by the painter's hand upon the sponge, compounded with the specific gravity of the sponge and the resistance of the air, the sponge did mechanically and unavoidably move in that particular line of motion. Bentley's Sermons.

TO SPUNGE. v. n. [rather to sponge.] To hang on others for maintenance.

This will maintain you, with the perquisite of sponging while you are young. Swift to Gay.

SPUNGINGHOUSE. n. f. [sponge and house.] A house to which debtors are taken before commitment to prison, where the bailiffs sponge upon them, or riot at their cost.

A bailiff kept you the whole evening in a sponginghouse. Swift.

SPUNGY. adj. [from sponge.]

1. Full of small holes, and soft like a sponge.

Some English wool, vex'd in a Belgian loom,
And into cloth of spungy softness made,
Died in France or colder Denmark room,
To run with worse air our staple trade. Dryden.

2. Wet; moist; watery.

I saw Jove's bird, the Roman eagle, wing'd
From the spungy south to this part of the west,
There vanish'd in the sun-beams. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

1. Having the quality of imbibing.

There is no leaf of more spongy bowels,
More spongy to suck in the fente of fear. Shak.

SPUNK. n. f. Rotten wood; touchwood.

See SPUNK.

To make white powder, the best way is by the powder of rotten willows; spunk, or touchwood prepared, might perhaps make it rustier.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SPUR. n. f. [spura, Saxon; spurs, Danish, Islandick, and Dutch; esperon, Fr.]

1. A sharp point fixed in the rider's heel, with which he pricks his horse to drive him forward.

He borrowing that homely armour for want of a better, had come upon the spur to redeem Philoclea's picture. Sidon.

Whether the body politic be

A horse whereon the governor doth ride,
Who, newly in the seat, that it may know
He can command it, lets it straight feel the spur. Shakspeare.

He presently set spurs to his horse, and departed with the rest of the company.

Knolly's History of the Turks.

Was I for this intitled Sir,
And girt with rusty sword and spur,
For fame and honour to wage battle? Hudibras.

2. Incitement; instigation. It is used with to before the effect. Dryden has used it with of; but, if he speaks properly, he means to make the following word personal.

Seeing then that nothing can move, unless there be some one; the desire whereof provoketh unto motion, how should that divine power of the soul, that spirit of our mind, ever stir itself into action, unless it have also the like spur? Hooker.

What need we any spur, but our own conscience,
To prick us to redress? Shakspeare's Julius Caesar.

His laws are deep, and not vulgar, not made upon the spur of a particular occasion, but out of providence of the future, to make his people more and more happy. Bacon.

Reward is the spur of virtue in all good arts, all laudable attempts; and emulation, which is the other spur, will never be wanting, when particular rewards are proportion'd. Dryden.

The chief, if not only, spur to human industry and action, is uneasiness. Locke.

The former may be a spur to the latter, till age makes him in love with the study, without any childish bait. Cheyne.

3. A stimulus; a prick; any thing that galls and teazes.

Grief and patience, rooted in him both,
Mingle their spurs together. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

4. The sharp points on the legs of a cock with which he fights.

Of birds the bill is of like matter with the teeth;
as for their spur, it is but a nail. Bacon.

Animals have natural weapons to defend and offend; some talons, some claws, some spurs and beaks. Ray.

5. Any thing standing out; a snag.

The strong-bad promontory
Have I made shaks, and pluckt up by the spurs
The pine and cedar. Shakspeare.

TO SPUR. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To prick with the spur; to drive with the spur.

My friend, who always takes care to cure his horse of staving fits, spurred him up to the very side of the coach. Addison.

Your father, when he moun'ted,
Rein'd 'em in strongly, and he spur'd them hard. Dryden.

Who would be at the trouble of learning, when he finds his ignorance is carefed? But when you brow-beat and maul them, you make them men; for though they have no natural mettle, yet, if they

they are spurred and kicked, they will mend their pace.
Collier as Pride.

2. To instigate; to incite; to urge forward.

Lovers break not hours,
Unless it be to come before their time:
So much they spur their expedition. Shakespeare.
Let the awe he has got upon their minds, be so tempered with the marks of good-will, that affection may spur them to their duty. Locke.

3. To drive by force.

Love will not be spurred to what it loaths. Shak.

To SPUR. v. n.

1. To travel with great expedition.

With backward bows the Patricians shall be there,
And, spurring from the fight, confess their fear:
A double wreath shall crown our Cæsar's brows. Dryden.

2. To press forward.

Alcanius took th' alarm, while yet he led,
And, spurring on, his equals soon o'erspo'd. Dryden's Æneid.

Some bold men, though they begin with infinite ignorance and errors, yet, by spurring on, refine themselves. Grew.

SPUR-GALL'D. adj. [spur and gall.] Hurt with the spur.

I was not made a horse,
And yet I bear a burden like an ass,
Spur-gall'd and tir'd by jangling Bolingbroke. Shak. Spence.

What shall each spur-gall'd hackney of the day,
Or each new-pension'd vicar, pretend
To break my windows, if I treat a friend? Pope.

SPURGE. n. f. [effurges, French; spurgis, Dutch; from purge, Latin.] A plant violently purgative. Spurge is a general name in English for all milky purgative plants. Skinner.

Every part of the plant abounds with a milky juice. There are seventy-one species of this plant, of which aurtwort is one. Broad-leaved spurge is a biennial plant, and used in medicine under the name of cataputia minor. The milky juice in these plants is used by some to destroy warts, but particular care should be taken in the application, because it is a strong caustic. Miller.

That the leaves of cataputia, or spurge, being

It scalds along my cheeks, like the green wood,
That, sputtering in the flame, works outwards into tears. Dryden.

2. To fly out in small particles with some noise.

The nightly virgin, while her wheel she plies,
Foresees the storm impending in the skies,
When sparkling lamps their sputtering light advance,
And in the sockets only bubbles dance. Dryden.

3. To speak hastily and obscurely, as with the mouth full; to throw out the spittle by hasty speech.

A poking owl sat sputtering at the sun, and asked him what he meant, to stand staring her in the eyes? L'Estrange.

They could neither of them speak their rage;
and so fell a sputtering at one another, like two roasting apples. Congreve.

Though he sputter through a fessum,
It never makes the least impression;
Whence'er he speaks for madness goes. Swift.

To SPUTTER. v. a. To throw out with noise and hesitation.

Thou dost with it, the throne invade;
Obtending heav'n for what'er it's entail,
And sputtering under specious names thy gall. Dryd.
In the midst of caresses, and without the least pretended incitement, to sputter out the basest accusations. Swift.

small drops.

SPUTTERER. n. f. [from sputter.] One that sputters.

SPY. n. f. [xipio, Welsh; espion, French;
spie, Dutch; speculator, Latin.] It is observed by a German, that spy has been in all ages a word by which the eye, or office of the eye, has been expressed:
that the Arimusprians of old, fabled to have but one eye, were so called from ari, which among the nations of Caucu-sus still signifies one, and spi, which has been received from the old Asiatick languages for an eye, sight, or one that sees.] One sent to watch the conduct or motions of others; one sent to gain intelligence in an enemy's camp or country.

We'll be at poor rogues

Talk of court news, and we'll talk with them too,
And take upon 's the mystery of things,
As if we were God's spies. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

Spies of the Volskians,
Held me in chace, that I was forc'd to wherl
Three or four miles aback. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Every corner was possessed by diligent spies upon their master and mistress. Clarendon.

I come no spy,
With purpose to explore, or to disturb,
The secrets of your realm. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Such command we had,
To see that none thence issued forth a spy,
Or enemy, while God was in his work. Milton.

Nothing lies hid from radiant eyes;
All they I bid become their spies:
Secrets, as chafin-jewels, lie
Pretended to oblige the fair. H. tie.

Over my men I'll set my careful spies,
To watch rebellion in their very eyes. Dryden.

These wretched spies of wit must then confess,
They take more pains to please themselves the less. Dryden.

Those who attend on their state, are so many spies placed upon them by the publick to observe them nearly. Antony.

And much good do't you then,
Have plush and velvet men;
Carried on out, and, safe in your stage clothes,
Dare quit, upon your oaths,
The stages and the stage weights too. Ben Jonson.

These two Mytilene brethren, basely born, crept out of a small galliot unto the majesty of great kings. Herein admire the wonderful changes and chances of these worldly things, now up, now down, as if the life of man were not of much more certainty than a stage play. Milnes's History.

I maintain against the enemies of the stage, that matters of poet, decently represented, may second the precept. Dryden.

One Livia Andronicus was the first stage plays in Rome. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.
Knights, squires, and steeds must enter on the stage. Pope.

I shall put you in mind where it was you promised to set out, or begin your first stage; and beseech you to go before me as my guide.

Hammond's Practical Catechism.

Our next stage brought us to the mouth of the Tiber. Addison.

From thence compell'd by craft and age,
She makes the head her last stage. Prior.

We must not expect that our journey through the several stages of this life should be all smooth and even. Atterbury.

By opening a passage from Muscovy to China, and marking the several stages, it was a journey of so many days. Baker.

Men drop so fast, ere life's mid stage we tread,
Few know so many friends alive as dead. Young.

5. A single step of gradual process.

The changes and vicissitudes in wars are many;
but chiefly in the stages of the war, the weapons, and the manner of the conduct. Bacon's Essays.

This is by some called the first stage of a consumption, but I had rather call it an ill habit preparatory to that distemper. Blackmore.

To prepare the soul to be a fit inhabitant of that holy place to which we aspire, is to be brought to perfection by gradual advances through several hard and laborious stages of discipline. Rogers.

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is by surgeons called digestion. Sharp's Surgery.

To STAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To exhibit publicly. Out of use.

I love the people;
But do not like to stage me to their eyes.
Though it do well, I do not wish wed
Their loud applause. Shakespeare. Measure for Measure.

The quick comedians
Extemporally will stage us, and present
Our Alexandrian revels. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleop.

STAGECOACH. n. f. [stage and coach.] A coach that keeps its stages; a coach that passes and repasses on certain days for the accommodation of passengers.

The story was told me by a priest, as we travelled in a stagecoach. Addison.

When late their misty sides stagecoaches show,
And their stiff harness through the town move slow
Then let the prudent walker shoes provide. Gay.

STAGEPLAY. n. f. [stage and play.] Theatrical entertainment.

This rough-cast unhewn poetry was instead of stageplays for one hundred and twenty years.
Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

STAGEPLAYER. n. f. One who publickly represents actions on the stage.

Among slaves who excelled poetic arts, none sold to despoil stageplayers of actors. Arbutnot on Coins.

STAGGER. n. f. [from stage.]

1. A player.

You, safe in your stage clothes,
Dare quit, upon your oaths,
The stagers and the stage weights too. Ben Jonson.

I've heard old cunning stagers
Say, finds for argument use wagers. Hudibras.
One experienced stager, that had baffled twenty traps and tricks before, discovered the plot. L'Estr.
Some stagers of the wiser sort
Made all these idle wonderments their sport:
But he, who heard what every fool could say,
Would never fix his thought, but trim his time away. Dryden.

One cries out, these stagers
Come in good time to make more work for wagers. Dryden.

Be by a parson cheated!
Had you been cunning stagers,
You might yourselves be treated
By captains and by majors. Swift.

STA'GEVIL. n. f. A disease in horses.

STA'GGARD. n. f. [from stag.] A four year old stag.

To STA'GGER. v. n. [staggeren, Dut.]

A man may, if he were fearful, stagger in this attempt. Shakespeare.

He stagged not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith. Romans, iv. 20.

Three means to fortify belief are experience, reason, and authority: of these the most potent is authority; for belief upon reason, or experience, will stagger. Baron.

No hereticks desire to spread
Their light opinions like these Epicures;
For to their stagging thoughts are comforted,
And other men's assent their doubt assures. Danvers.

It thou confidently depend on the truth of this, without any doubting or stagging, this will be accepted by God. Hammond.

But let it inward sink and drown my mind:
Falseness shall want its triumph: I begin
To stagger; but I'll prop myself within. Dryden.

To STA'GGER. v. a.

1. To make to stagger; to make to reel.

That had shall burn in never quenching fire,
That staggers thus my person. Shakespeare. Rich. II.

2. To shock; to alarm; to make less steady or confident.

The question did at first so stagger me,
Bearing a state of mighty moment in't.

What ever will read the story of this war, will find himself much stagged, and put to a kind of riddle. Howell.

When a prince falls in honour and justice, 'tis enough to stagger his people in their allegiance.

The shells being lodged with the beleaguers, telenites, and other like natural fossils, it was enough to stagger a spectator, and make him ready to entertain a belief that this were so too. Woodward.

STA'GERS. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A kind of horie apoplexy.

His horie put cure of the ives, stark spoil'd with the stagers. Shakespeare.

2. Madnets; wild conduct; irregular behav- iour. Out of use.

I will throw thee from my care for ever
Into the stagers, and the careless lapie
Of youth and ignorance. Shakespeare.

STA'GNANCY. n. f. [from stagnant.] The state of being without motion or ventila- tion.

STA'GNANT. adj. [stagnans, Latin.] Motionless; full; not agitated; not flowing; not running.

What does the flood from putrefaction keep?
Should it be stagnant in its ample seat,
The sun would through it spread destructive heat. Blackmore.

'Twas owing to this hurry and action of the water, that the sand now was cast into layers, and not to a regular settlement from a water quiet and stagnant. Woodward.

Immur'd and buried in perpetual sloth,
That gloomy slumber of the stagnant soul. Irene.

To STA'GNATE. v. n. [stagnum, Lat.] To lie motionless; to have no course or stream.

The water which now arises must have all stagnated at the surface, and could never possibly have been refunded forth upon the earth, had not the strata been thus raised up.

The aliment moving through the capillary tubes stagnates, and unites itself to the vessel through which it flows.

Where creeping waters ooze,

Where marshes stagnate.

STAGNATION. n. f. [from stagnate.] Stop of course; cessation of motion. It is often applied figuratively to moral or civil images.

As the Alps surround Geneva on all sides, they form a vast basin, where there would be a constant stagnation of vapours, did not the north wind scatter them from time to time.

To what great and sublequent is the wind
Behold, where'er this active vapour flies,
It drives the clouds, and agitates the skies:
This from stagnation and corruption lavies
Th' aerial ocean's ebb-rolling waves.

STAGNANT. part. adj. [from stagnare.] Sober; grave; regular; composed; not wild; not volatile.

Put thyself

Into a 'haviour of let's tear, ere wildness
Vanquish my slender senses.

O'erland with black, stagnant wisdom's hue.

I should not be a persuader to them of studying much in the spring, after three years that they have well laid their grounds; but to ride out, with prudent and stagnant guides, to all the quarters of the land.

I am the more at ease in Sir Roger's family, because it consists of sober and stagnant persons.

STAGNANTNESS. n. f. [from stagnant.] Sobriety; gravity; regularity; contrariety to wildness.

The bounding blood of youth, fiercely agitating the fluid air, hinders that serenity and fixed stagnantness which is necessary to so severe an intention.

Glanville's Scipio.

It sometimes he appears too gay, yet a secret gracefulness of youth accompanies his writings, through the stagnantness and sobriety of age he wants.

STAGNANT. v. a. [from stagnare, Welsh, from ys and stagnu.]

Rhag Gwyar or Grawd,

Afar stagnant.

Talryss, an old British poet.]

1. To blot; to spot; to maculate.

Lend me a looking-glass;

If that her breath will moist or stagnant the stone,
Why then she lives.

From the gash a stream

His armour stagnant, erewhile so bright.
Embrace again, my sons; be foes no more,
Nor stagnant your country with your children's gore.

2. To dye.

3. To disgrace; to spot with guilt or infamy.

Of honour void, of innocence, of faith, of purity,
Our wanted ornaments now stagnant and stagnant.

STAGNANT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Blot; spot; discoloration.

We nowhere meet with a more pleasing show than what appears in the heavens at the rising and setting of the sun, which is wholly made up of those different stagnant of light that show themselves in clouds of a different situation.

Swift trowers, diversified with crimson stagnant;
And pikes, the tyrants of the wat'ry plains.

2. Taint of guilt or infamy.

Nor death itself can wholly wash their stagnant,
But long contracted filth ev'n in the soul remains:
The reliques of inveterate vice they wear,
And spots of sin.

To solemn actions of royalty and justice, their suitable ornaments are a beauty: are they only in religion stagnant?

Our opinion, concerning the force and virtue which such places have, is, I trust, without any blemish or stagnant of herself.

Then heav'n and earth, renew'd, shall be made pure
To sanctity, that shall receive no stagnant.
Ulysses bids his friends to cast lots; for if he had made the choice himself, they whom he had rejected might have judged it a stagnant upon them for want of merit.

3. Cause of reproach; shame.

Hereby I will lead her that is the praise, and yet the stagnant, of all woman-kind.

STAGNANT. n. f. [from stagnant.] One who stains; one who blots; one who dyes; a dyer.

STAGNANTLESS. adj. [from stagnant.]

1. Free from blots or spots. Not in use.

The phoenix wings are not so rare
For faultless length and stagnantless hue.

2. Free from sin or reproach.

I cannot love him;
Yet I suppose him virtuous, know him noble,
Of great estate, of fresh and stagnantless youth.

STAIR. n. f. [from stiegen, Saxon; stijge, Dutch.] Steps by which we rise in ascent from the lower part of a building to the upper. Stair was anciently used for the whole order of steps; but stair now, if it be used at all, signifies, as in Milton, only one flight of steps.

A good builder to a high tower will not make his stair upright, but winding almost the full compass about, that the sleepers be the more insensible.

How many cowards, whose hearts are all as false
As stairs of land, wear yet upon their chins
The beards of Hercules and frowning Mars!
Slaver with lips as common as the stairs
That mount the capital.

I would have one only goodly room above stairs, of some forty foot high.

Sir James Tirrel repairing to the Tower by night, attended by two servants, stood at the stair-foot, and sent these two villains to execute the murder.

The stairs were such as whereon Jacob saw Angels ascending and ascending.

Satan now on the lower stair,
That fell'd by steps of gold to heaven gate,
Looks down with wonder at the sudden view
Of all this world.

Tumbling he springs,
As terror had increas'd his feet with wings;
Nor stair for stairs, but down the depth he threw
His body; on his back the door he drew.

STAIRCASE. n. f. [from stair and case.] The part of a fabrick that contains the stairs.

To make a complete staircase is a curious piece of architecture.

I cannot forbear mentioning a staircase, where the easiness of the ascent, the disposition of the lights, and the convenient landing, are admirably contrived.

STAKE. n. f. [from staca, Saxon; stacck, Dutch; staca, Spanish.]

1. A post or strong stick fixed in the ground.

The more I staked the stake which he had planted in the ground of my heart, the deeper still it sunk into it.

His credit in the world might stand the poor town in great stead, as hitherto their ministers foreign estimation hath been the best stake in their hedge.

He wanted pikes to set before his archers;
Instead whereof sharp stakes, pluck'd out of hedges,
They pitched in the ground.

In France the grapes that make the wine grow upon low vines bound to small stakes, and the ruffled vines in arbors make but verjuice.

Or sharpen stakes, or head the forks, or twine
The fallow twigs to tie the straggling vine.

2. A piece of long rough wood.

While he whirl'd in fiery circles round
The brand, a sharpen'd stake strong Dras found,
And in the shoulder's joint infix'd the wound.

3. Any thing placed as a palliade or fence.
That hollow I should know! what are you? speak:
Come not too near, you fall on iron stakes else.

4. The post to which a beast is tied to be baited.

We are at the stake,
And bayed about with many enemies.

Have you not seen mine honour at the stake,
And baited it with all th' unmuzzled thoughts
That tyrannous heart can think?

5. Any thing pledged or wagered. I know not well whence it has this meaning: I suppose it is so named from being at stake, that is, in a state of hazard like an animal baited, and in hazard from which it cannot be withdrawn.

'Tis time short pleasure now to take,
Of little life the best to make,
And manage wisely the last stake.

O then what interest shall I make
To live my last important stake,
When the most just have cause to quake!
He ventures little for so great a stake.
Th' increasing found is borne to either shore,
And for their stakes the throwing nations fear.

6. The state of being hazarded, pledged, or wagered.

When he heard that the lady Margaret was declared for it, he saw plainly that his kingdom must again be put to the stake, and that he must fight for it.

Are not our liberties, our lives,
The laws, religion, and our wives,
'Enough at once to lie at stake,
For cov'nant and the cause's sake?
The honour of the nation being in a manner at stake to make good several deficiencies.

Of my crown thou too much care dost take;
That which I value more, my love, 's at stake.
Hath any of you a great interest at stake in a distant part of the world? Hath he ventur'd a good share of his estate?

7. The stake is a small anvil, which stands upon a small iron foot on the work-bench, to remove as occasion offers; or else it hath a strong iron spike at the bottom, let into some place of the work-bench, not to be removed. Its office is to set small cold work straight upon, or to cut or punch upon with the cold chisel or cold punch.

To STAKE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten, support, or defend with posts set upright.

Stake and bind up your weakest plants and flowers against the winds, before they in a moment prostrate a whole year's labour.

2. To wager; to hazard; to put to hazard.
Is a man betrayed in his nearest concerns? The cause is, he relied upon the service of a pack of villains, who designed nothing but their own game, and to stake him while they played for themselves.

Persons, after their prisons have been flung open, have chosen rather to languish in their dungeons than stake their miserable lives on the success of a revolution.

They dust not stake their pretence and fortune happines on their own chimerical imaginations.
Addison.

I'll stake you' lamb that near the fountain plays,
And from the brink his dancing shade survey.
Pope.

STALACTICAL. adj. Resembling an icicle.

A cave was lined with those stalactical stones on the top and sides. Derham's Physico-Theology.

STALACTITES. n. f. [fr. m. stalactis.] Stalactites is only that in the shape of an icicle, accidentally formed in the perpendicular fissures of the stone. Woodward.

STALAGMITES. n. f. Spar formed into the shape of drops. Woodward's Meth. Foss.

STALE. adj. [stelle, Dutch.]

1. Old; long kept; altered by time.
Stale is not used of persons otherwise than in contempt; except when it is applied to beer, it commonly means worse for age.

This, Richard, is a curious case;
Suppose your eyes sent equal rays
Upon two distant pots of ale,
Not knowing which was mild or stale;
In this sad state your doubtful choice
Would never have the casting voice.
Prior.
A stale virgin sets up a shop in a place where she is not known. Spectator.

2. Used till it is of no use or esteem; worn out of regard or notice.

The duke regarded not the muttering multitude, knowing that rumours grow stale, and vanish with time. Hayward.

About her neck a parquet mail,
Traught with advice, some fresh, some stale.
Butler.

Many things beget opinions; so doth novelty;
with which it stale, is less taking. Greav's Cosmologia Pompey was a perfect favourite of the people;
but his pretensions grew stale, for want of a timely opportunity of introducing them upon the stage.
Swift.

They reason and conclude by precedent,
And own stale nonseñ which they ne'er invent.
Pope.

STALE. n. f. [from stelan, Saxon, to steal.]

1. Something exhibited or offered as an allurement to draw others to any place or purpose.

His heart being wholly delighted in deceiving us,
we could never be wined; but rather one bird caught, lived for a stale to bring in more. Stany.

Still a he went he crony stales did lay,
With cunning means how to entrap unwares;
And prey upon the blood in all his way,
To see what count he takes, and how he fares.
Spenser.

The trumpety in my boots bring hither,
For stale to catch these thieves. Shakspeare's Tempest.
Had he some else to make a stale but me?
I was the chief that led him to the crown,
And I'll be chief to bring him down again.
Shakspeare's Henry VI.

A pretence of kindness is the universal stale to all base project - by this men are robbed of their fortunes, and worn of their honour.

Government of the Tongue.
It may be a vice in the hypocrite, and a stale for the ambitious. Detay of Every.

That easy fool must be my stale, let up
To catch the people's eyes: he's tame and merciful;
And I can manage. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

In Shakspeare it seems to signify a pro-fite.

I stand dishonour'd, that have gone about
To link my dear friend to a common stale. Shak.

[from stale, adj.] Urine; old urine.

Old beer; beer somewhat acidulated.

5. [stale, Dutch, a stick.] A handle.
But, seeing th' arrows stale without, and that the head did goe

No further than it might be seen, he call'd his spirits again. Chapman.

It hath a long stale or handle, with a button at the end for one's hand. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To stale. v. a. [from the adjective.] To wear out; to make old. Not in use.

Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale
Her infinite variety. Shak. Antony and Cleopatra.

We're a common laughter, or did use
To stale with ordinary oaths my love

To every new protestor. Shakspeare's Julius Caesar.

A barren-spirited fellow, one that leads
On object oars and imitations;

Which, out of use, and stale'd by other men,
Begin his fashion. Shakspeare's Julius Caesar.

To stale. v. n. [from the noun.] To make water.

Having tied his beast to a stale,
And taken time for both to stale. Hudibras.

STALELY. adv. [from stale.] Of old;
of long time.

All your promul'd mountains
And seas I am to stalely acquainted with. B. Jon.

STALENESS. n. f. [from stale.] Oldness; state of being long kept; state of being corrupted by time.

The beer and wine, as well within water as above, have not been stale; but somewhat better than bottles of the same drinks and *stale*ness, kept in a cellar. Bacon's Natural History.

Provided our landlord's principles were sound, we did not take any notice of the *stale*ness of his propositions. Addison.

To STALK. v. n. [revelan, Saxon.]

1. To walk with high and superb steps.
It is used commonly in a sense of dislike.

His monstrous enemy
With sturdy steps came stalking in his sight. Spenser.

Shall your city call us lord,
In that behalf by which we challeng'd it?

Or shall we give the signal to our rage,
And stalk in blood to our possession? Shak. K. John.

Unfold the eternal door:
You see before that gate what stalking ghost

Commands the guard, what sentries keep the post.
Dryden.

With many men he stalk'd along the ground;
Nor wanted voice belov'd nor vaunting sound. Dryden.

Then stalking through the deep
He fords the ocean, while the topmost wave

Scarce reaches up his middle side. Aldisfen.

Vexatious thought still found my flying mind,
Nor bound by limits, nor to place confin'd;

Haunted by night, and terrified my days,
Stalk'd through my gardens, and pursued my fears;

Nor shut from artful bow'r, nor lost in winding maze.
Prior.

Scornful turning from the shore
My haughty step, I stalk'd the valley o'er.
Pope's Odyssey.

2. It is often used with some insinuation of contempt, or abhorrence.

Bartran
Stalks close behind her, like a witch's fiend.

Piecing to be employ'd. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

They pass their precious hours in plays and sports,
Till death behind came stalking on unseen. Dryden.

'Tis not to stalk about, and draw fresh air
From time to time. Addison's Cato.

3. To walk behind a stalking horse or cover.

The king asked how far it was to a certain town:
they said six miles. Half an hour after he asked again: one said six miles and a half. The king alighted out of his coach, and crept under the shoulder of his led horse: and when some asked his majesty what he meant, I must stalk, said he;
for yonder town is thy, and flies me.
Bacon's Apophthegms.

STALK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. High, proud, wide, and stately step.
Behind it forth there leapt

the very fiend, more foul than dismal day;
The which with monstrous stalk behind him stept,
And ever as he went due watch upon him kept.
Spenser.

Great Milton next, with high and haughty stalks, Unfetter'd in majestic numbers walks. Addison.

2. [stale, Dutch.] The stem on which flowers or fruits grow.

A stock-gillyflower, gently tied on a stick, put into a steep glass full of quicksilver, so that the quicksilver cover it; after five days you will find the flower fresh, and the stalk harder and less flexible than it was. Bacon.

Small store will serve, where store,
All seasons, ripe for use hangs on the stalk. Milton.

That amber attracts not basil, is wholly repugnant unto truth; for if the leaves thereof, or dried stalks, be stripped unto small straws, they arise unto amber, wax, and other electricks, no other-ways than those of wheat and rye. Brown.

Roses unbud, and every fragrant flower,
Flew from their stalks to strew thy nuptial bow'r.
Dryden.

3. The stem of a quill.

Viewed with a glass, they appear made up of little bladders, like those in the plume of stalk of a quill. Greav.

STALKINGHORSE. n. f. [stalking and horse.] A horse either real or fictitious, by which a fowler shelters himself from the sight of the game; a mask; a pretence.

Let the counsellor give counsel not for faction but for conscience, forbearing to make the good of the state the stalking horse of his private ends.
Hakewell on Providence.

Hypocrisy is the devil's stalking horse, under an affectation of simplicity and religion. L'Estrange.

3. [stall, Swedish; stal, Armoric.] A small house or shed in which certain trades are practised.

All these together in one heap were found
Like cartels of battle in butcher's stalls;
And in another corner wide were strew'd
The antique ruins of the Roman fall.
4. The seat of a dignified clergyman in the choir.

The pope creates a canon beyond the number limited, and commands the chapter to assign unto such canon a stall in the choir and place in the chapter.

The dignified clergy, out of mere humility, have called their thrones by the names of stalls.
Warburton.

7. STALL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To keep in a stall or stable.

For such enchainment, if you go nie;
Few chimneys reeking you will espy;
The fat ox, that won't ligg in the stall,
Is now fast stalled in his crumal. Spenser's Poet.
For my part, he keeps me rustically at home;
or, to speak more properly, flies me here at home unket: for call you that keeping, for a gentleman of my birth, that differs not from the stalling of an ox? Shakespeare.

Nisus the forest pass'd,
And Alban plains, from Alba's name so call'd,
Where king Latinus then his oxen stall'd. Dryden.

2. [for install.] To invest.

Long may'st thou live to wait thy children's loss;
And see another, as I see thee now,
Deck'd in thy rights as thou art stall'd in mine.
Shakespeare.

style, and on which the apices grow at their extremities.

4. A slight sort of stuff.

STAMINEOUS. adj. [stamineus, Latin.]

1. Consisting of threads.

2. Stamineous flowers are so far imperfect
Vol. II.

As to what those coloured leaves which are called petals, and consist only of the stylus and the stamina; and such plants as do bear these stamineous flowers Ray makes to constitute a large genus of plants: these he divides into such as, first, have their fruit or seed totally divided from the flower; and these are such plants as are said to be of different sexes: the reason of which is, that from the same seed some plants shall arise with flowers and no fruit, and others with fruit and no flowers; as hops, hemp, flinging nettles. 2. Such as have their fruit only a little disjointed from their flowers; as the ricinus, and the heliotropium triconon. 3. Such as have their stammer, Dutch.] To speak with unnatural hesitation; to utter words with difficulty.

Sometimes to her news of myself to tell
I go about; but then is all my best
Wry words, and stammering, or else doltish dumb:
Say then, can this but of enchantment come?
Sidney.

I would thou couldst stammer, that thou might'st pour out of thy mouth, as wine comes out of a narrow-mouth'd bottle, either too much at once, or none at all. Shakespeare.

She stammers; oh what grace in liping lies!
If she says nothing, to be sure she's wise. Dryden.

Lagan juice,
Which stammering tongues and stagg'ring feet produce. Dryden.

Cornelius hoped he would come to stammer like Demosthenes. Arbutnot's Martinus Scribarius
Your hearers would rather you should be less correct, than perpetually stammering, which is one of the worst solecisms in rhetoric. Swift.

STAMMERER. n. s. [from stammer.] One who speaks with hesitation.

A stammerer cannot with moderation hope for the

There, stamp'd with arms, Newcastle shines complete. Pope.

4. To fix a mark by impressing it.

Out of mere ambition, you have made
Your holy hat be stamp'd on the king's coin. Shak.
These prodigious conceits in nature spring out of framing abstracted conceptions, instead of those easy and primary notions which nature stamps in all men of common sense. Digby.

There needs no positive law or sanction of God to stamp an obliquity upon such a disobedience.
South.

No constant reason of this can be given, but from the nature of man's mind, which hath this notion of a duty born with it, and stamp'd upon it; or is of such a frame, that in the free use of itself it will find out God. Tillotson.

Though God has given us no innate ideas of himself; though he has stamped no original characters on our minds, wherein we may read his being; yet, having furnished us with the faculties our minds are endowed with, he hath not left himself without witness. Locke.

What titles had they had, if nature had not Strove hard to thrust the world desiring first,
And stamp'd the noble mark of eldership Upon their baser metal? Rowe's Ambition's Tragedy.

What an unspeakable happiness would it be to a man engaged in the pursuit of knowledge, if he had but a power of stamping his best sentiments upon his memory in indelible characters! Harris.

5. To make by impressing a mark.

If two pennyweight of silver, marked with a cer-

'Tis gold is pure,

It cannot bear the stamp without alloy. Dryden.

2. A mark set on any thing; impression.

But to the pure refined ore
The stamp of kings imparts no more Worth, than the metal held before. Curry.
That sacred name gives ornament and grace,
And, like his stamp, makes basest metals pass:
"I were folly now a stately pile to raise,
To build a playhouse, while you throw down a play."
Dryden.

Ideas are imprinted on the memory; some by an object affecting the senses only; others, that have more than once offered themselves, have yet been little little taken notice of; the mind, intent only on one thing, not settling the stamp deep into itself. Locke.

3. A thing marked or stamped.

The mere desire of surgery he cures;
Hanging a golden stamp about their necks,
Put on with holy prayers. Shakespeare's Marb.

Did very much his genius clamp;
And since he could not spend his fire,
He now intended to retire. Swift.

6. A character of reputation, good or bad, fixed upon any thing.

The prisons here reflected upon are of such a peculiar stamp of impurity, that they form a kind of discoloured society for the sinners, not new experiments in vice. South.

Where reason or scripture is expressed for an opinion, we may receive it as of divine authority; but it is not the strength of our own persuasion which can give it that stamp. Locke.

7. Authority; currency; value derived from any suffrage or attestation.

Of the same stamp is that which is obtained upon us, that an adam still suspends the attraction of the Jordan. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The common people do not judge of vice or virtue by the morality or the immorality, so much as by the stamp that is set upon it by men of figure. L'Estrange.

8. Make; cast; form.

If speaking truth
In this line age were not thought flattery,
Such attribution should this Douglas have,
As not a soldier of this season's stamp
Should go to general court through the world. Shakespeare.

When one man of an exemplary improbity charges another of the same stamp in a court of justice, he has under the disadvantage of a strong suggestion. L'Estrange.

Let a friend to the government relate to him a matter of such, he gives him the lie in every look; but if one of his own stamp should tell him that the king of Sweden would be suddenly at Paris, he hugs himself at the good news. Addison.

A king of his own stamp, not vulgar make,
Blended in giving, and avails to take. Hart.

1. Condition; circumstances of nature or fortune.

I do not
Infer as if I thought my star's state Secure.

Milton.

I found the whole city highly concerned for the hazardous state of Caudin, which was lost so on after. Dominico Contarini, the present duke, was sedulous in that affair.

Brady's Travels.

Their sins have the aggravation of being sins against grace, and forsaking and departing from God.

God.

God; which respect makes the state of the most unaccountable, to the most dangerous state.

Thus have his prayers for state and amended the state of his own state.
Relate what state state state.
Declare the past and present state state.

When in triumphant state the British muse,
True to herself, shall bard rous'd old retire.

These kings' robes are the marks of sovereign power. Reflexion.

In state the monarchs march'd; the lions bore
The awful axes and the rods before. Dryden's Ann.
Let my attendants wait, I'll be alone;
Where a list of state, there most of love is shown.

To appear in their robes would be a troublesome piece of state. Dryden.

He is surrounded by a servile crowd,
Prompts to abuse, and in detraction loud.

Abroad begirt with men, and forward and backward,
His very state acknowledging his weakness.

If God has deliver'd me up to evil, I shall be dragg'd by them to places of torment; could I be any comfort to me that they found me upon a bed of state?

and yet with a modest sense of his misfortune.

The swan rows her state with easy feet. Milton.
He was staid, and in his gait
Preserv'd a grave majestic state. Burke.

Such cheerful modesty, such humble state,
Moves certain love. Waller.

Can this imperious lord forget to reign,
Quit all his state, defend, and serve again?

He will consider, not what arts, or methods, or application will soonest make him richer and greater than his brethren, or remove him from a shop to a life of state and pleasure; but will consider what arts, what methods, what application can make worldly business most acceptable to God, and make a life of trade a life of holiness, devotion, and piety. Pope's Statist.

13. A seat of dignity.

This chair shall be my state, this dagger my sceptre, and this cushion my crown.

As she affected not the grandeur of a state with a canopy, she thought there was no offence in an elbow chair. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

The brain was her study, the heart her state room. Abraham.

14. A canopy; a covering of dignity.

Pleas'd highly those infernal states. Milton.

17. Joined with another word, it signifies publick.

I am no courtier, nor versed in state affairs: my life hath rather been contemplative than active. Bacon.

Council! What's that? a pack of bearded slaves,
The scavengers that sweep state nuisances,
And are themselves the greatest. Dryden's Cleomenes.

I am accus'd of reflecting upon great states-folks. Swift.

To STATE. v. a. [constater, French.]

1. To settle; to regulate.

This is so stated a rule, that all cruises press
it in all cases of damage. Dryden's Fanny.

This is to state accounts, and look more like merchandise than friendships. Colley's Trifling.

He is capable of corruption who receives more than what is the stated and unquestioned fee of his office. Adison.

2. To represent in all the circumstances of modification.

Many other inconveniences are consequent to the stating of this question; and particularly that, by those which thus state it, there hath never been assigned any definite number of fundamentals.

It is perfect state stated it to be what it now is.

Were our case stated to any sober hearer, he would never guess why they who acknowledge it, do not pray, and confess the same God, may not all in the same form. Decay of Piety.

To state it fairly, imitation is the most stated way for a translator to show himself, but the greatest wrong which can be done to the dead. Dryden.

I pressed not fully to state, much less demonstrated, the truth contained in the text. Afterbury.

Though I don't pretend to state the exact degree of pitch'd ease, done by us yet its phisic and natural tendency to do harm is sufficient to justify the most absolute condemnation of it. Law.

ST A TELINESS. n. f. [from stately.]

1. Grandeur; majestic appearance; august manner; dignity.

We may collect the excellency of the understanding then by the glorious remembrance of it now, and guess at the statelyness of the building by the magnificence of its ruins. South.

For statelyness and majesty what is comparable to a horse? Moss's Anecdotes against Atterbury.

2. Appearance of pride; affected dignity.

Agenor, glad such punishment ready bills
Did on his own design itself obtuse,
Swell'd his vast looks to bigger statelyness. Stramont's Phycia.

She hated statelyness, but wisely knew
What just regard was to her rich due. Betterton.

ST A TELY. adj. [from stately.]

1. August; grand; lofty; elevated; majestic; magnificent.

A stately pyramid to her I'll rear,
Than Rhodope's or Memphis' ever was. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

government.

It looks grave enough
To seem a statesman. Ben Jonson.

The corruption of a poet is the generation of a statesman. Pope.

2. One employed in publick affairs.

If such actions may have passage free,
Bond-slaves and pagans shall our statesmen be. Shakespeare's Othello.

It is a weakness which attends high and low;
the statesman who holds the helm, as well as the peasant who holds the plough. South.

Absolute power is not a plant that will grow in this soil, and statesmen, who have attempted to cultivate it here, have pulled on their own and their master's ruin. Davenant.

A British minister must expect to see many friends fall off, whom he cannot gratify; since, to use the phrase of a late statesman, the pasture is not large enough. Adison.

Here Britain's statemen oft the fall foredoom
Of foreign tyrants, and of nymphs at home. Pope.
STATESWOMAN. n. f. [stat and woman.]
A woman who meddles with publick affairs: in contempt.

How she was in debt, and where she meant
To raise herself: she was a great stateswoman! Ben Jonson.

Several of them may innocently be ridiculed, as the patients of our stateswomen. Addison.

STATISTICAL. adj. [from the noun.] Relating to the science of weighing.

A man weigheth some pounds less in the height of winter, according to experience, and the statistick
aphorisms of Sanctious. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

If one by a statistical engine could regulate his inferible population, he might often, by restoring of that, forke, prevent, or shorten a fit of the gout. Arbutnot on Diet.

STATICKS. n. f. [statu; statique, Fr.]
The science which considers the weight of bodies.

This is a catholic rule of statiks, that if any body be bulk for bulk heavier than a fluid, it will sink to the bottom, and if lighter, it will float upon it, having part extant, and part immersed, as that to much of the fluid as is equal in bulk to the immersed part be equal in gravity to the whole.
Bentley.

STATION. n. f. [station, French; statio, Latin.]

1. The act of standing.

Their manner was to stand at prayer, whereupon their meetings unto that purpose on those days had the names of stations given them. Hoker.

In station like the herald, Mercury,
Ne-lighted on a heaven-kissing hill. Shak. Timon.

2. A state of rest.

All progression is performed by drawing on or impelling forward some part which was before in station or at quiet, where there are no joints.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. A place where any one is placed.

The soldiers remained within their station, which, by reason of the nativeness of the beastly multitude, might more fitly be termed a kennel than a camp. Hayward.

The players in their station list'ning stood. Milt.

4. Post assigned; office.

Michael in either hand leads them out of Paradise, the fiery serpent waving behind them, and the cherubims taking their stations to guard the place. Milton.

5. Situation; position.

To single stations now what years bring,
With planets joint, they claim a noble zone. Crauch.

The fig and date, why love they to remain
In middle statu, and an even plain;
While in the lower marsh the guard is found,
And while the tall with olive shade is crown'd?
Prior.

6. Employment; office.

No member of a political body so mean, but it may be used in some station or other. Jefferson.

By spending this day in religious exercise, we acquire new strength and resolution to perform
God's will in our lives. Stations the week follow.
Nelson.

They believe that the common size of human understanding is fitted to some station or other.
Quint.

Whether those who are leaders of a party arrive at that station more by a sort of instinct, or influence of the stars, than by the possession of any great abilities, may be a point of much dispute.
Swift.

Character; state.

Far the greater part have kept their station. Milt.

7. Rank; condition of life.

I can be contented with an humbler station, in the temple of virtue, than to be set on the pinnacle. Dryden.

To STATION. v. a. [from the noun.] To place in a certain post, rank, or place.

STATIONARY. adj. [from station.]

1. Fixed; not progressive.

Between the descent and ascent, where the image seemed stationary, I stopped the prison, and fixed it in that posture, that it should be moved no more.
Newton's Opticks.

2. Respecting place.

The same harmony and stationary constitution, as it happened in many species, so doth it fall out in individuals. Brown.

3. Belonging to a stationer.

STATIONER. n. f. [from station.]

1. A bookfeller.

Some modern tragedies are beautiful on the stage, and yet Tryphon the stationer complains they are seldom asked for in his shop. Dryden.

With authors, stationers obey'd the call;
Glory and gain the industrious tribe provoke,
And gentle Dulness ever love, a joke. Pope's Dun.

2. A feller of paper.

STATISMAN. n. f. [from statu.] A statesman; a politician; one skilled in government.

I do believe,
Swift though I am none, nor like to be,
That this shall prove a war. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

Their orators thou then extoll'st, as those
The top of eloquence, statists indeed,
And lords of their country. Milton's Par. Reg.

STATUARY. n. f. [statuaire, Fr. from statua, Latin.]

1. The art of carving images or representations of life.

The northern nations, that overwhelmed it by their numbers, were too barbarous to preserve the remains of learning more carefully than they did those of architecture and statuary. Temple.

2. One that practises or professes the art of making statues.

On other occasions the statuaries took their subjects from the poets. Aldrich.

How shall any man, who hath a genius for history, undertake to do a work with spirit and cheerfulness, when he considers that he will be read with pleasure but a very few years? This is like employing an excellent statuary to work upon mouldering stone. Swiss.

STATUE. n. f. [statue, Fr. statua, Latin.] An image; a solid representation of any living being.

The princess heard of her mother's statue, a piece many years in doing, and now newly performed by that rare Italian master. Shak. W. Tuh.

They spake not a word;
But like dumb statues, or unheaving stones,
Stare'd each on other. Shakspeare's Richard III.

Architects propounded unto Alexander to cut the mountain Athos into the form of a statue, which in his right hand should hold a bow capable of containing ten thousand men, and in his left a vessel to receive all the water that flowed from the mountain. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

A statue, Polydorus, called the rule, deserves the name for having to perfect an agreement in all its parts, that it is not possible to find a rule more fit. Dryden's Darius.

To STATUTE. v. a. [from the noun.] To place as a statute.

Thus have we worshipp'd, kiss'd, lov'd, and ador'd;
And, thus we have made in his idolatry,
Divine vessels of his law and in thy stead. Shak.

STATURE. n. f. [stature, Fr. statura, Latin.] The height of any animal.

What stature we attain at seven years we some times double, most times come short of at one-and-twenty. Brown.

A creature who might erect
His stature, and upright with front serene Govern the rest.

Foreign men of mighty stature came, Milton.

Thyself but dust, thy stature but a span; Dryden.

A moment thy duration, foolish man! Prior.

We have certain demonstration from Egyptian mummies, and Roman urns and rings, and measures and edifices, and many other antiquities, that human stature has not diminished for above
two thousand years. Bentley's Sermons.

STATUTABLE. adj. [from statute.] According to statute.

I met with one who was three inches above five feet, the statutable measure of that club.

Addison's Guardian.

Some nymphs alight a more heroic breed,
And vault from hunters to the manag'd steed. Toung.

STEEL. n. f. [stal, Saxon; staal, Dutch.]

1. Steel is a kind of iron, refined and purified by the fire with other ingredients, which renders it white, and its grain closer and finer than common iron. Steel, of all other metals, is that susceptible of the greatest degree of hardness, when well tempered; whence its great use in the making of tools and instruments of all kinds. Chambers.

Stal is made from the purest and finest iron, by keeping it red hot, stratified with coal-dust and wood shavings, or other substances that abound in the phlogiston, for several hours in a close furnace. Lull's Metals Medica.

At her back a bow and quiver gave,
Stuff'd with steel-headed darts, whence with the quell'd.

The savage brasts in her vastuous play. Spenser.

nor won from'd.

A looking glass, with the steel behind, is better whiter than glass simple. Bacon's Natural History.
Diamonds, though hard bodies, will not retain strike fire with steel, much less with one another, nor a fine easily with a steel, as they both be wet,
the sparks being then quenched in their eruption. Brown's Vagabond.

Both were of shining steel, and wrought to pierce,
As might the strokes of two such arms endure. Dryden.

2. It is often used metonymically for weapons or armour.

Brave Macbeth with his brandish'd steel,
Which smok'd with bloody execution,
Cav'd out his passage, and he had fac'd the slave. Shakep.

Polish'd steel from its severely shine. Dryden.

He, sudden as the word,
In proud Pegasus' bosom plung'd the sword,
Toxus unaid'd, and with amazement flew,
Stood doubting; and, while doubting thus he stood,
Receiv'd the steel bath'd in his brother's blood. Dryden.

3. Chalybeate medicines.

After relaxing, steel strengthens the solids, and is likewise an anti-acid. Arbutnot.

4. It is used proverbially for hardness:
as heads of steel.STEEL. adj. Made of steel.

Add proof unto the armour with thy prayers,
And with thy blessings steel my conscience's point. Shakep. Richard II.

2. To make hard or firm. It is used, if it be applied to the mind, very often in a bad sense.

Lies well steel'd with weighty arguments. Shakep.
So service shall with steel'd fingers toil,
And labour shall refresh itself with hope. Shakep. Henry V.

From his metal was his party steel'd;
Which, once in him reposed, all the rest
Turn'd on themselves, like dull and heavy lead. Shakep. Henry V.

O God of battles! steel my soldiers hearts,
Puff is them not with fear. Shakep. Henry V.
Why will you fight against to sweet a passion,
And put your heart to such a world of charms? Adolph.

Man, foolish man!
Scarcely know'st thou how thyself began;
Yet, steel'd with studied boldness, thou dar'st try
To lend thy doubting reason's dazzled eye
Through the mysterious gulf of vast immensity. Prior.

Let the steel'd Turk be deaf to matrons cries,
See virgins ravish'd with relentless eyes. Tickel.
So perish all whose hearts the furies steel'd,
And curs'd with hearts unknowing how to yield. Pope.

STEELY. adj. [from steel.]

1. Made of steel.

Thy brother's blood the thirsty earth hath drunk, Brough'd with the steely point of Chib's lance. Shakep. Henry V.

STEEP. n. f. Precipice; ascent or descent approaching to perpendicularity.

As that Theban monster that propos'd;
Her middle, and him, who I had not, devour'd;
That once found out and sol'd, for grief and light
Cast herself headlong from the mountain steep. Milton.

As high tunet for their airy steep
Require two nations in preparation deep;
And I the cedars far upwards shoot
As to the ether heavens they drive the root;
So low did her secure foundation lie,
She was not humble, but humilic. Dryden.

Let not the beast to know his native tract,
To color the bit between his teeth, and fly
To the next headlong steep of anarchy. Dryden.

We had on each side naked rocks and mountains, broken into a thousand irregular steep and precipices. Dryden.

Learning o'er the rails, he munn'd steel,
A view'd below the black canal, and saw,
Where common fishes a hollow murmur keep,
Whose torrents rush from H bore. Dryden.

To STILL. v. n. [stilla, Latin.] To drop; to fall in drops. Out of use.

His sceptre gain'd the ground he threw,
And tears still'd from him which mov'd all the crew. Chapman.

Short thick soba, whose thund'ring valleys floor,
And soul themselves over her lubric throat
In panting murmurs, still'd out of her breast,
That ever bubbling spring. Craford.

STILLATI'OUS. adj. [stillatus, Lat.] Falling in drops; drawn by a still.

STILLATORY. n. f. [from still or distil.] 1. An alembick; a vessel in which distillation is performed.

In all stillatories, the vapour is turned back upon itself, by the encounter of the sides of the stillatory. Bacon.

2. The room in which stills are placed; laboratory.

All offices that require heat, as kitchens, stillatories, stoves, should be meridional. Watson's Architecture.

These are nature's stillatories, in whose caverns the ascending vapours are congealed to that universal aquaviva, that good fresh water. Morganst. Arabism.

STILLBORN. adj. [still and born.] Born lifeless; dead in the birth.

Grant that our hopes, yet likely of fair birth,
Should be stillborn, and that we now possess
The utmost man of expectation, we are A body strong enough to equal with the kings. Shaksp.

Many casualties were but matter of sense; as, whether a child were abortive or stillborn. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

The pale assistants on each other star'd,
With gaping mouths for issuing words prepar'd. B. b. a.

The stillborn sounds upon the palate hung,
And dead imperfect on the faltering tongue. Dryd.
I know a trick to make you thrive;
O, 'tis a quaint device
Your stillborn poems shall revive,
And soon to wrap up spice. Swift.

STILLICIDE. n. f. [stillicidium, Latin.]
A succession of drops.

The stillicides of water, if there be water enough to follow, will draw themselves into a small thread, because they will not discontinue. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
STILLICIDIOUS. adj. [from stillicide.]
Falling in drops.

Crystal is found sometimes in rocks, and in some places not unlike the stitious or stillicious dependencies of ice. Brown.

1. The act of stilling.

2. A stand for casks.

STILLNESS. n. f. [from still.]

1. Calm; quiet; silence; freedom from noise.

How sweet the moonlight sleeps upon this bank!
Here will we sit, and let the sounds of musick
Creep in our ears: soft stillness and the night Become the touches of sweet harmony. Shaksp.

When black clouds draw down the lab'ring skies,
An horrid stillness first invades the ear,
And in that silence we the tempest fear. Dryden.

Virgil, to lighten the horror of Æneas's pulling by this coast, has prepared the reader by Caje-ta's funeral, and the stillness of the night. Dryden.

If a house be on fire, those at next door may escape, by the stillness of the weather. Swift.

2. Habitual silence; taciturnity.

The gravity and stillness of your youth
The world hath noted. Shakspere's Othello.

STILIS. n. f. [stilor, Swedish; stalien, Dutch; stælcen, Saxon.] Supports on which boys raise themselves when they walk.

Some could not be content to walk upon the buttments, but they must put themselves upon stilis. Howe's England's Tears.

The heron, and such like fowl that live of fishes, walk on long stilis like the people in the marshes.

More against Aibisim.

Men must not walk upon stilis. L'Estrange.

TO STIMULATE. v. a. [stimulo, Lat.]

1. To prick.

2. To prick forward; to excite by some pungent motive.

3. [In physick.] To excite a quick sensation, with a derivation towards the part.

Extreme cold stimulates, producing first a rigour, and then a glowing heat; those things which stimulate in the extreme do not excite pain.

Arbutnot on Diet.

Some medicines lubricate, and others both lubricate and stimulate. Shaksp.

STIMULATION. n. f. [stimulatio, Latin.]

Excitement; pungency.

Some persons, from the secret stimulation of vanity or envy, despise a valuable book, and throw it away upon it by wholesale. Watts on the Mind.

STING. v. a. preterite I stung or stung; participle passive stung or stung.

stingan, Saxon; stungen, fore pricked, [Islandick.]

1. To pierce or wound with a point darted out, as that of wasps or scorpions.

The snake, rolled in a flow'ry bank,
With shining checker'd slough, doth sting a child
That for the beauty thinks it excellent. Shaksp.
That snakes and vipers sting, and transmit their mischief by the tail, is not easily to be justified;
the poison lying about the teeth, and communicated by the bite. Brown.

2. To pain acutely.

His unkindness,
That stript her from his benediction, turn'd her
To foreign casualties, gave her dear right
To his doghearted daughters; these things sting him
So venomously, that burning shame detains him
From his Cordelia. Shakspere.

No more I wave

To prove the hero.—Slander stings the brave. Pope.
The stinging lash apply. Pope.

STING. n. f. [from the verb.]

are armed, and which is commonly ve-nomous.

Serpents have venomous teeth, which are mistaken for their sting. Bacon's Natural History.

His rapier was a hornet's sting;
It was a very dangerous thing;
For if he chanc'd to hurt the king,
It would be long in healing. Drayton.

2. Any thing that gives pain.

The Jews receiving this book originally with such sting in it, shews that the authority was high.

Fobus

3. The point in the last verse.

It is not the jerk or sting of an epigram, nor the seeming contradiction of a poor antithesis. Dryden.

4. Remorse of conscience.

Decay of Piety.

STINGO. n. f. [from the sharpness of the taste.] Old beer. A cant word.

STINGY. adj. [a low cant word. In this word, with its derivatives, the g is pronounced as in gem.] Covetous; niggardly, avaricious.

A stingy narrow-hearted fellow, that had a deal of choice fruit, had not the heart to touch it till it began to be rotten. L'Estrange.

He relates it only by parcels, and won't give us the whole; which forces me to bespeak his friends to engage him to lay aside that stingy humour, and gratify the publick at once.

Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

TO STINK. v. n. preterite I stunk or stank.
[stuman, Saxon; stinken, Dutch.] To emit an offensive smell, commonly a smell of putrefaction.

John, it will be stinking law for his breath. Shak.
When the children of Ammon saw that they
stank before David, they sent and hired Syrians.

2 Sam. x. 6.

What a fool art thou, to leave thy mother for a nasty stinking goat!

L'Estrange.

Most of smells want names; sweet and stinking serve our turn for these ideas, which is little more than to call them pleasing and displeasing. Locke.

Chlois, this costly way to stink give o'er,
'Tis throwing sweet into a common shore;

Not all Arabia would sufficient be;
Thou smell'st not of thy sweets, they stink of thee.

Granville.

STINK. n. f. [from the verb.] Offensive smell.

Those stinks which the nostrils straight abhor are not most pernicious; but such airs as have some similitude with man's body, and so betray the spices. Bacon's Natural History.

They share a sin; and such proportions fall,
That, like a stink, 'tis nothing to them all. Dryd.

By what criterion do ye eat, d' ye think,
If this is priz'd for sweetness, that for stink? Pope.

STINKARD. n. f. [from stink.] A mean stinking paltry fellow.

STINKER. n. f. [from stink.] Something intended to offend by the smell.

The air may be purified by burning of stinkpots or stinkers in contagious lanes. Harvey.

STINKINGLY. adv. [from stinking.]
With a stink.

Canst thou believe thy living is a life
So stinkingly depending? Shakspere.

STINKPOT. n. f. [stink and pot.] An artificial composition offensive to the smell.

The air may be purified by fires of pitch barrels, especially in close places, by burning of stink- pots. Harvey.

TO STINT. v. a. [stynta, Swedish; stanta, Islandick.] To bound; to limit; to confine; to restrain; to stop.

The reason hereof is the end which he hath proposed, and the law whereby his wisdom hath stinted
the effects of his power in such sort, that it doth not work infinitely, but correspondently, unto that end for which it worketh. Hooker.

Then hopeless, heartless, 'gan the cunning thief
Perfuade us die, to stint all further strife. Spenser.

Nature wisely stints our appetite,
And craves no more than undisturb'd delight.

Dryden.

I shall not go about to extenuate the latitude of the curse upon the earth, or stint it only to the production of weeds; but give it its full scope, in an universal diminution of the fruitfulness of the earth. Woodward.

A supposed heathen deity might be so pious in his attributes, to stint in his knowledge, that a Pagan might hope to conceal his perjury from his notice. Addison.

Few countries which, if well cultivated, would not support double their inhabitants, and yet it were where one third are not extremely stinted in necessaries. Swift.

She stints them in their meals, and as very temperous of what they eat and drink, and tells them how many fine shapes she has seen spoiled in her time for want of such care. Law.

STINT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Limit; bound; restraint.

We must come at the length to some pause:
for if every thing were to be desired for some other without any stint, there could be no certain end proposed unto our actions; we should go on we know not whither. Hooker.

The exterior of mourning, a decent funera, and black habits, are the usual stints of common husbands. Dryden.

2. A proportion; a quantity assigned.

Touching the stint or measure thereof, rites and ceremonies, and other external things of the like nature, being hurried unto the church, either in respect of their quality, or in regard of their number; in the former there could be no doubt or difficulty what would be done; their deliberation in the latter was more difficult. Hooker.

Our stint of woe
Is common; every day a sailor's wife,
The masters of some merchant, and the merchant,
Have just our theme of woe. Shakspere.

He that gave the hint,
This letter for to print,

Must also pay the stint. Denham.

How much wine drink you in a day? my stint
in company is a pint at noon. Swift.

STIFFEND. n. f. [Stipendium, Latin.]

Wages; settled pay.

All the earth,
Her kings and tetrarchs, are their tributaries;
People and nations pay them hourly stipends.

St. Paul's zeal was expressed in preaching with out any offerings or stipend. Ben Jonson.

STIPENDIARY. adj. [Stipendiarius, Lat.]

Receiving salaries; performing any service for a stated price.

His great stipendiary prelates came with troops of evil appointed householders not half full.

are now served only by stipendiary curates. Swift.

STIPENDIARY. n. f. [Stipendiaire, Fr.]

Stipendiarius, Latin.] One who performs any service for a settled payment.

This whole country is called the kingdom of Tunis; the king whereof is a kind of stipendiary unto the Turk. Abbot.

If thou art become
A tyrant's vile stipendiary, with grief
That valour thus triumphant I behold,
Which after all its danger and brave toil,
Deserves no honour from the gods or men. Glover.

STIPITIC. See STYPTIC.*TO STIPULATE. v. n. [Stipular, Lat.]

Stipular, French.] To contract; to time affairs, for they stipulated with the Carthaginians to furnish them with ships for transport and war. Arbutnot.

STIPULATION. n. f. [Stipulation, French, from stipulate.] Bargain.

We promise obediently to keep all God's commandments; the hopes given by the gospel depend on our performance of that stipulation. Rogers.

STIPULATOR. n. f. One who contracts or bargains.TO STIR. v. a. [stiran, Saxon; stieren, Dutch.]

1. To move; to remove from its place.

My foot I had never yet in five days been able to stir, but as it was lifted. Tumple.

Other spirits
Shot through their tracks, and distant muscles fill:
Thus sovereign, by his arbitrary nod,
Restraints or sends his ministers abroad,
Swift and obedient to his high command,
They stir a finger, or they lift a hand. Blackmore.

2. To agitate; to bring into debate.

Preclude the right of thy place, but stir not questions of jurisdiction; and rather assume thy right in silence than voice it with claims. Bacon.

One judgment in parliament, that cases of that nature ought to be determined according to the common law, is of greater weight than many others to the contrary, wherein the question was not stirred; yea, even though it should be stirred, and the contrary affirmed. Hale.

3. To incite; to instigate; to animate.

With him is come the mother queen;
An Are stirring him to blood and strife. Shakespeare.
If you stir these daughters hearts
Against their father, fool me not so much To bear it tamely. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Nestor next beheld
The subtle Pylian orator range up and downe the field,
Embattailing his men at armes, and stirring all to blowes. Chapman.

4. To raise; to excite.

The soldiers love her brother's memory,
And for her sake some mutiny will stir. Dryden.

5. To stir up. To incite; to animate; to instigate by inflaming the passions.

This would seem a dangerous commission, and ready to stir up all the Irish in rebellion.

Spenser's Ireland.

The greedy thirst of royal crown,
That knows no kindred, no regards, no right,
Stir'd Pomey up to put his brother down. Spenser.

The words of Judas were very good, and able to stir them up to valour. Malacab xiv. 17.

Having overcome and thrust him out of his kingdom, he stirred up the Christians and Numidians against him. Kneller.

The vigorous spirit of Montrose stirred him up to make some attempt, whether he had any help or no. Clarendon.

The improving of his own parts and happiness is him up to so notable a design. Mure against Athol.

Thou with rebel insolence didst dare
To own and to protect that hoary ruffian,
To stir the factious rabble up to arms. Rowe.

6. To stir up. To put in action; to excite; to quicken.

Hell is moved for thee, to meet thee at thy coming, it stirrah up the dead for thee. Isaiah, xiv. 9.

Such mirth the jocund flute or game some pipe
stirs up among the loose unletter'd hinds. Milton.

To stir up vigour in him, employ him in some constant bodily labour. Locke.

The use of the passions is to stir up the mind and put it upon action, to awake the understanding, and to enforce the will. Addison.

TO STIR. v. n.

No power he had to stir, nor will to rise. Spenser.

They had the semblance of great bodies behind, on the other side of the hill; the falsehood of which would have been manifest as soon as they should move from the place where they were, and from whence they were not to stir. Clarendon.

We acknowledge a man to be mad or melancholy, who fancies himself to be glasse, and so is afraid of stirring, or, taking himself to be wax, dares not let the sun shine upon him. Law.

2. To be in motion; not to be still; to pass from inactivity to motion.

The great Judge of all knows every different degree of human improvement, from their weak stirring and tendencies of the will, which have not yet formed themselves into regular purposes, to the last entire consummation of a good habit. Andison's Spectator.

3. To become the object of notice.

It they happen to have any curious character, they fancy they have a right to talk freely upon every thing that stirs or appears. Watts.

4. To rise in the morning. This is a coloquial and familiar use.

If the gentlewoman that attends the general's wife be stirring, tell her there's one Calisto entreats of her a little favour of speech. Shakespeare. Othello.

STIR. n. f. [stir, Runick, a battle;
stwrff, noise, Welsh.]

1. Tumult; bustle.

What hallooing and what stir is this to-day?
These are my mates, that make their wills their law,
Have some unhappy passenger in chace. Shakespeare.

Tumultuous stir upon this strife ensue. Drayton.
He hath spun a fair thread, to make all this stir for such a necessity as no man ever denied. Bp. Bramhall.

Tell, said the soldier, miserable fit,
Why all these words, this clamour, and this stir?
Why do disputes in wrangling spend the day?
Denham.

The great stirs of the disputing world are but the conflicts of the humours. Glanville.

After all this stir about them, they are good for nothing. Johnson.

Consider, after so much stir about genus and species, how few words we have yet settl'd definitions of. Locke.

Silence is usually worse than the fiercest and loudest accusations; since it proceeds from a kind of numbness or stupidity of conscience, and an absolute dominion obtained by sin over the soul, so that it shall not so much as dare to complain or make a stir. South's Sermons.

2. Commotion; public disturbance; tumultuous disorder; seditious uproar.

Whensoever the earl shall die, all those lands are to come unto her majesty; he is like to make a foul stir there, though of himself of no power, yet through suppliance of some others who lie in the wind. Spenser's Ireland.

He did make these stirs, grieving that the name of Christ was at all brought into those parts. Abbot.

Being advertised of some stirs raised by his unnatural sons in England, he departed out of Ireland without a blow. Davies.

Raphael, thou hear'st what stir on earth
Satan, from hell 'tis up'd through the darksome gulf,
Hath rais'd in Paradise, and how disturb'd
This night the human pair. Milton.

3. Agitation of thoughts; conflicting passion.

He did keep
The dock, with glove, or hat, or handkerchief
Still waving, as the stirs and fits of 's mind
Could best express how flow his soul sail'd on,
How swift his ship. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

STIRIOUS. adj. [from stiria, Lat.] Resembling icicles.

Chrysal is found sometimes in rocks, and in some places not much unlike the stirious or stillicidious dependencies of ice. Brown's Vulgar Erra.

4. STIRREK UP. An inciter; an instigator.
A perpetual spring, not found elsewhere but in the Indies only, by reason of the sun's neighbourhood, the life and stirrer up of nature in a perpetual activity. Raleigh.

Will it not reflect on thy character, Nic, to turn baculet in thy old days; a stirrer up of quarrels betwixt thy neighbours? Arbutnot.

STIRRUP. n. f. [stirgenap, stirnap; from stiran, Saxon, to climb, and nap, a cord.] An iron hoop suspended by a strap, in which the horseman sets his foot when he mounts or rides.

Neither is his manner of mounting unseemly, though he lack stirrups; for in his getting up, his horse is still going, whereby he gaineth way; and therefore the stirrup was called so in scorn, as it were a stay to get up; being derived of the old English word stry, which is to get up, or mount.

Spenser.
Hast thou not kiss'd my hand, and held my stirrup? Shakespeare.

His horse hipped with an old motley saddle, the stirrups of no kindred. Shakespeare. Taming of the Shrew.

My friend, judge not me,
Thou seest I judge not thee.
Between the stirrup and the ground,
Mercy I ask'd, mercy I found. Camden's Rem.

At this the knight began to cheer up,
And raising up himself on stirrup,
Cried out, Victoria. Hudibras.

Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

With love's light wing did I overperch these walls;
For stony limits cannot hold love out. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

Nor slept the winds
Within their stony caves, but rush'd abroad
From the four hinges of the world, and fell

On the vast wilderness, whose tallest pines,
Though rooted deep as high and sturdiest oaks,
Bow'd their stiff necks, laden with stormy blasts,
Or torn up sheer. Milton's Paradise Regained.
Here the marshy grounds approach your fields,
And there the soil a stony harvest yields. Dryden's Virgil.

In those who never pity felt? Shakespeare.

- STOOD*. The preterite of To stand.

Adam at the news,
Heart-struck with chilling gripe of sorrow stood. Milton.

- STOOL*. n. f. [stool, Gothic; stool, Sax. stool, Dut.]

1. A seat without a back, so distinguished from a chair.

If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person without a back. Watts's Logic.

I thou fearful stool,
Why takest thou of the same fruit of gold?
Ne strest down on that same silver stool,
To rest thy weary person in the shadow cold? Spenser.

Now which were wise, and which were fools?
Poor Alma sits between two stools;
The more she reads, the more perplexed. Prior.

2. Evacuation by purgative medicines.

There be medicines that move stools, and not urine; some other urine, and not stools; those that purge by stools, are such as enter not all, or little into the mesenteric veins; but either at the first are not digestible by the stomach, and therefore move immediately downwards to the guts; or else are afterwards rejected by the mesenteric veins, and so turn likewise downwards to the guts. Bacon's Natural History.

The peristaltick motion, or repeated changes of contraction and dilatation, is not in the lower guts, else one would have a continual need of going to stool. Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. STOOL of Repentance, or Catty Stool, in the kirk of Scotland, is somewhat analogous to the pillory. It is elevated above the congregation. In some places there may be a seat in it; but it is generally without, and the person stands therein, who has been guilty of fornication; for three Sundays, in the forenoon; and after sermon is called upon by name and surname, the beadle or kirk-kirk-officer bringing the offender, if refractory, forwards to his post; and then the preacher proceeds to admonition. Here too are set to publick view adulterers; only these are habited in a coarse canvas, analogous to a hairy or monastick velt, with a hood to it, which they call the sack, or sackcloth; and that every Sunday throughout a year, or longer.

Unequal and unreasonable judgment of things brings many a great man to the fool of repentance.

STOOL-BALL. n. f. [fool and ball.] A play where balls are driven from stool to stool.

While Betty dances on the green,
And Susan is at foolball seen.

2. To lean forward standing or walking.

When Pelopidas and Ismenias were sent to Artaxerxes, Pelopidas did nothing unworthy; but Ismenias let fall his ring to the ground, and, stooping for that, was thought to make his adoration.

He stooping open'd my left side, and took
From thence a rib.

3. To yield; to bend; to submit.

I am the son of Henry the fifth,
Who made the dauphin and the French to stoop.

Mighty in her ships stood Carthage long;
And swept the riches of the world from far;
Yet stoop'd to Rome, less wealthy, but more strong.

4. To descend from rank or dignity.

Where men of great wealth stoop to husbandry,
It multiplieth riches exceedingly.
He that condescended to sit, and stooped to low, to invite and to bring us to heaven, will not refuse us a gracious reception there.

The proud Dueffa, full of wrathful spite
And fierce disdain to be affronted so, Infer'd her purple head with all her might,
That stop out of the way to overthrow. Spenser
On indeed the west: but O! not fir;
A faithful naviator the bold long course. Daniel Blessed be that God who erst rubs, stops, and kindness in new ways, when I was attempting the communion of such a bliss. South
So much holy approach should inspire us with and to stop, to leave fly to the rising torrent, and check him over it with of ungodliness. Rivers

8. Instrument by which the sounds of wind musick are regulated.

You would play upon me, you would seem to know my stop; you would pluck out the heart of my mystery. Shakespeare

But are these,
Which I said and judgment are so well commingled,
That they are not a pipe for fortune's finger
To sound what stop the pleads. Shakespeare, Hamlet

The harp
Held work, and test it not; the solemn pipe,
And dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop. Milton

The sound
Of instruments, that made melodious choir,
Vn a head of harp and organ; and who mov'd
Then stop, and chords, was seen, his volant touch Instinct through all proportions, low and high, Fled, and pursued transverse the resonant fugue. Milton

A variety of strings may be observed on their harp, and of stops on their tibia, which shews the little foundation that such writers have gone upon, who, from a short passage in a classical author, have determined the precise shape of the ancient musical instruments, with the exact number of their pipes, strings, and stops. Addison on Italy

9. Regulation of musical chords by the fingers.

The tauter a string is strained, the less super-straining girth to a note; for it requirith good winding of a string before it will make any note at all: and in the stops of lutes, the higher they go, the less distance is between the frets. Bacon

10. The act of applying the stops in musick.

The organ found a time survives the stop,
Before it doth the dying note give up. Daniel's Civil War

11. A point in writing, by which sentences are distinguished.

Even the iron-pointed pen,
That notes the tickle dooms of men,
Wet with tears still'd from the eyes
Of the sitty destinies,
Would have leav'd a softer style,
And have been aflam'd to spoil
His life's former story by the haste
Of a cruel stop ill-plac'd. Cassano

STO'P-COCK. n. f. [stop and cock.] A pipe made to let out liquor, stopped by a turning cock.

No man could spit from him without it, but

STORE. n. f. [stôr, in old Swedish and Runick, is much, and is prefixed to other words to intend their signification; stôr, Danish; stoor, Islandick, is great. The Teutonick dialects nearer to English seem not to have retained this word.]

1. Large number; large quantity; plenty.
The ships are fraught with store of victuals, and good quantity of treasure. Bacon

Nor yet, but store hereafter from the earth
Up hither like aerial vapours flew,
Of all things transitory and vain when sin
With vanity had fill'd the works of men. Milton
Joy's grant me length of life, and years good store
Heap on my benched brow. Dryden's Juvenal

2. A stock accumulated; a supply hoarded.

We liv'd supine amidst our flowing store,
We slept securely, and we dreamt of more. Dryden
Divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame:
The sweet enthusiasm from her sacred store
Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds,
And added length to solemn sounds. Dryden
Thee, goddess, thee, Britannia's isle adores:
How has she oft exhausted all her stores!
How oft in fields of death thy pience sought,
Nor thinks the mighty prize too dearly bought! Addison

Their minds are richly fraught with philosophick stores. Johnson

Her power with boundless joy confest,
Her person only not stord. Prætor

2. To stock against a future time.

Some were of opinion that it were best to stay where they were, until more aid and store of victuals were come; but others said the enemy were but barely stord with victuals, and therefore could not long hold out. Knutler's History

One having stord a pond of four acres with carps, tench, and other fish, and only put in two small pikes, at seven years end, upon the draught, not one fish was left, but the two pikes grown to an excessive bigness. Ilali

The mind reflects on its own operations about the ideas got by sensation, and thereby stores itself with a new set of ideas, which I call ideas of reflection. Locke

To store the vessel let the care be mine
With water from the rocks, and rosy wine,
And life-sustaining bread. Pope's Odyssey

3. To lay up; to hoard.

stock, laid in and stord up, and then delivered out in proportion. Bacon

STOREHOUSE. n. f. [store and house.]

1. Magazine; treasury; place in which things are hoarded and repositied against a time of use.

By us it is willingly confessed, that the scripture of God is a storehouse abounding with inestimable treasures of wisdom and knowledge, in many kinds over and above things in this kind barely necessary. Hooker

Suffer us to famish, and their storehouses cramm'd with grain! Shakespeare's Coriolanus
Joseph opened all the storehouses, and fold unto the Egyptians. Gen. xli. 56

To these high powers a storehouse doth pertain,
Where they all arts and gen'ral reasons lay;
Which in the soul, ev'n after death, remain,
And no Lethæan flood can wash away. Dante
My heart hath been a storehouse long of things
And sayings laid up, portending strange events. Milton

The image of God was resplendent in man's practical understanding, that storehouse of the soul, in which are treasured up the rules of action and the seeds of morality. South

As many different sounds as can be made by single articulations, so many letters there are in the storehouse of nature. Holder

To walk the studious cloister pale,
And love the high embow'd stool,
With antick pillar, mossy proof;
And storied windows, richly dight,
Casting a dim religious light. Milton

Some greedy minion or imperious wife
The triumphed arches, storied halls, invade. Pope

STORK. n. f. [storp, Saxon; iconsta, Lat.]

A bird of passage, famous for the regularity of its departure.

Its beak and legs are long and red; it feeds upon serpents, frog, and insects: its plumage would be quite white, were not the extremity of its wings, and also some part of its head and thighs, black:
it sits for thirty days, and lays but four eggs: they go away in the middle of August, and return in spring. Cultræ

The stork in the heaven knoweth her appointed time. Jeremiah

Who bid the stork, Columbus like, explore Heavens not his own, and wail unknown before:

Recite them, nor in erring pity fear
To wound with stori'd griefs the filial ear.

Pope.

2. To range one under another.

Because all the parts of an undisturbed fluid are of equal gravity, or gradually placed or stori'd according to the difference of it, any concretion that can be supposed to be naturally and mechanically made in such a fluid, must have a like structure of its several parts; that is, they be all over of a similar gravity, or have the more ponderous parts nearer to its basis.

Bentley's Sermons.

STORYTELLER. n. f. [story and tell.] One who relates tales in conversation; an historian, in contempt.

In such a satire all would seek a share,
And every fool will fancy he is there;
Old storytellers too must pine and die;
'To see their antiquated wit laid by;
Like her, who mislaid her name in a lampoon.
And griev'd to find herself decay'd to soon.

Dryd.

Company will be no longer pestered with dull,
dry, tedious storytellers.

The giant struck so mainly merciless,
That could have overthrow a ston y tower;
And, were not heav'nly grace that him did bless,
He had been powdered all as thin as flowers.

Spenser.

But he was wary of that deadly stour.

Spenser.

STOUT. adj. [stout, Dutch; stolz, proud, German; stautan, Gothick, is to strike.]

1. Strong; lusty; valiant.

When I was young,
I do remember how my father said,
A stouter champion never handled sword.

St. Stephens's Henry VI.

Some captain of the land or fleet,
Stout of his hands, but of a soldier's wit,
Cries, I have scale to seize my turn, in stout,
And he's a rascal who pretends to more.

Dryden.

2. Brave; bold; intrepid.

The stout-hearted are spoiled.

Psalms lxxvi. 5.

He lost the character of a bold stout, and magnanimous man, which he had been long reputed to be.

Clarendon.

3. Obdurate; pertinacious; resolute; proud.

The lords all stand,
To clear their cause, most resolutely stout.

Daniel.

There virtue and stout honour pass'd the goal,
Those only friends that could not be debat'd.

Baillie.

4. Strong; firm.

The stout vessel to the storm gave way,
And suck'd through loosen'd planks the rushing sea.

Dryden.

STOUT. n. f. A cant name for strong beer.

Should but his muse detect any drop
A slice of bread and butter chug,
Or kindly, when his credit's out,
Surprise him with a pint of stout,
Exalted in his mighty mind,
He flies and leaves the stink behind.

Swift.

STOUTLY. adv. [from stout.] Lustily; boldly; obstinately.STOUTNESS. n. f. [from stout.]

1. Strength; valour.

2. Boldness; fortitude.

His bathos in youth was the very true sign of his virtue and stoutness after.

Shaksp. Titus.

3. Obstinacy;

3. Obstinacy; stubbornness.

Coming all in ruin, let,
Thy mother rather feel thy pride, than fear
Thy dangerous stoutness; for I mark at death
With as stout heart as thou. Shakspeare, Coriolanus.
To STOW. v. a. [stow, Saxon; stoe, old Frisch, a place; stouwen, Dutch, to lay up.] To lay up; to deposit in order; to lay in the proper place.

Foul that I will not shift thou stow'd my daughter?
Shakspeare, Titus Andronicus.

It's the hollow of the saddle-bow
That's the puller, he did stow. Hudibras.
Son, place their oars, or slip the lucky side.

Dryden.
All the patients were beheaded, stow'd in dungeons, or condemn'd to work in the mines. Add.
The soldiers stow'd the vessel from the shores,
A stow'd within its womb the naval stores. Pope
So grieves the advent'rous merchant, when he throws

All his long toil'd-for treasure his ship stows into the angry main. Carew.

STOWAGE n. s. [from stow.]

1. Room for laying up.

In every vessel stowage for immense treasures, when the cargo is pure and on, or may be size of as great a value. Augier.

2. The state of being laid up.

'Tis pluck of rare device, and jewels
Of rich and exquisite form, their value's great;
And I am something cur'd, being strange,
To have them in late stowage. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

3. Money paid for stowing of goods.

STOWE, STOF, whether singly or jointly, are the same with the Saxon stow, a place. Gibson's Camden.

STRA'BISM. n. s. [strabisme, Fr. strabismus, Lat.] A squinting; act of looking askint.

To STRADDLE. v. n. [supposed to come from striddle or stride] To stand or walk with the feet removed far from each other to the right and left; to part the legs wide.

Let man survey himself, divested of artificial clothes, and he will find himself a fork'd straddling animal, with broad legs. Arbuthnot and Pope.

To STRAGGLE. v. a. [Of this word no etymology is known: it is probably a frequentative of stray, from strawian, Italian, of extra viam, Latin.]

1. To wander without any certain direction; to rove; to ramble.

But straggle back on the thanks to bring his friend
A tale to tell, and fees the journey's end.
Shakspeare, As You Like It.

A word spelt out a straggle kid, and common man. Shakspeare, Twelfth Night.

Children, even when they endeavour their utmost, cannot keep their minds from stragglings.
Locke.

2. To wander dispersedly.

Hebbs-wif could be poor stragglings soldiers with great quantity. Shakspeare, Henry IV.
They found the third some of the stragglings hel-diers, who out of the battle lay behind. Clarendon
Form straggle, a wantonness, for publick good,
To rank in tribes, to quit the savage wood,
Houses to build, and them contiguous make,
For cheerful neighbourhood and sister's sake. Lucan.

3. To exuberate; to shoot too far.

Were they content to pursue the lavish vine
Of straggle branches, and improve the wine.
'Tis off the small it perfumes branch on each side of the hedge, that straggle too far out.

Blount's Glossary.

To be dispersed; to be apart from any main body; to stand single.

Having passed the Syrens, they came between Scylla and Charybdis, and the straggling rocks, which seemed to cast out great store of flames and smoke. Ralegh.

Wide was his parish, not contracted close
In street, but here and there a straggling house;
Yet still he was at hand. Dryden.

STRAGGLER. n. s. [from straggle.]

1. A wanderer; a rover; one who forsakes his company; one who rambles without any settled direction.

The lad should keep the country from passage of stragglers from these parts, whence they use to come down, and oftentimes use to work much mischief. Spenser's Ireland.

Let's while these stragglers o'er the seas again,
Laid hence these over-weening rags of France,
These famish'd beggars. Shakspeare, Richard III.

But this mistle is supposed to be half stolen by stragglers, and the other half broken. Swift.

2. Any thing that pushes beyond the rest, or stands single.

Let thy hand supply the pruning knife,
And crop luxuriant stragglers, nor be loth
To strip the branches of their leafy growth. Dryden.

In pruning he corrects the vines,
And the lost stragglers to their ranks confines. Pope.

STRAIGHT. adj. [strack, old Dutch. It is well observed by Amstovorth, that for not crooked we ought to write straight, and for narrow, strait; but for straight, which is sometimes found, there is no good authority.]

1. Not crooked; right.

Beauty made barren the swell'd boast
Of him that best could speak; feature, landing
The shrine of Venus, or straight night Minerva.
Shakspeare.

A hunter's horn and cornet is oblique; yet they have likewise straight horns; which, if they be of the same bore with the oblique, differ little in sound, five that the straight require some what a stronger blast. Bacon's Natural History.

There are many several sorts of crooked lines,
but there is one only which is straight. Dryden.

Water and air the wavy form confound;
The straight looks crook'd, and the square grows round. Prior.

When a staff appears crooked while half under the water, the water gives me a false idea. Watson's Legick.

2. Narrow; close. This should properly be strait. [strait, Fr. See STRAIT.]

Queen Elizabeth used to say of her officers to great officers, that they were like to garments, strait at the first putting on, but did by and by wear loose enough. Bacon.

3. Tense; tight. Of this sense it is doubtful whether it belongs to strait, close, narrow; or to straight, not crooked. Pull the cord straight, may mean, draw it till it has no flexure; tie it strait about you, may mean, draw it into a narrower compass. This ambiguity has perhaps confounded the orthography.

STRAIGHT. adv. [strax, Danish; strack, Dutch.] Immediately; directly. This sense is naturally derived from the adjective, as a straight line is the shortest line between two points.

It the devil come and roar for them,
I will not send them. I will after straight,
And tell him so. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

Those stinks which the nostrils straight abhor and expel, are not the most pernicious.

Bacon's Natural History.

With chalk I first describe a circle here,
Where the returned spirits must appear:
Come in, come in, for here they will be strait;
Around, around the place I famigate. Dryden.

I know thy generous temper well;
Fling but the appearance of dishonour on it,
It straight takes fire, and mounts into a blaze. Addison.

To STRAIGHTEN. v. a. [from straight.]

1. To make not crooked; to make straight.

A crooked stick is not straightened, except it be as far bent on the clean contrary side. Hooker.

Of ourselves being so apt to err, the only way which we have to straighten our paths is, by following the rule of his will, whose footsteps naturally are right. Hooker.

2. To make tense; to tighten.

STRAIGHTLY. adv. [from straight.]

1. In a right line; not crookedly.

2. Tightly; with tension.

STRAIGHTNESS. n. s. [from straight.]

1. Rectitude; the contrary to crookedness.

Some are for masts, as fir and pine, because of their length and straightness. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. Tension; tightness.

STRAIGHTWAY. adv. [straight and way.]

It is very often written straightways, and therefore is perhaps more properly written straightwise. Immediately; straight.

Let me here for ay in peace remain,
Or straightway on that last long voyage fare. Spenser.

Soon as he enter'd way, the straightway
Did shut. Spenser.

Like to a ship, that, having straightway
Is straightway claim'd and boarded with a pirate.

Shakspeare.

The Turks straightway breaking in upon them, made a bloody fight. Kroll's.

As soon as iron is out of the fire, it deadeth
straightways. Bacon.

The sound of a bell is strong; continueth some time after the percussion; but straightways it the bell or string be touched. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The sun's power being in those months greater, it then straightways hurries steams up into the atmosphere. Woodward.

To STRAIN. v. a. [estrindre, French.]

1. To squeeze through something.

Their aliment ought to be light, rice boiled in whey, and strained. Abulcasis on Diet.

2. To purify by filtration.

Earth doth not strain water so finely as sand.

Bacon.

3. To squeeze in an embrace.

I would have strain'd him with a strict embrace;
But through my arms he slipped and vanish'd. Dryden.

Old Evander with a close embrace
Strain'd his departing friend, and tears o'erflow'd his face. Dryden's Æneid.

4. To sprain; to weaken by too much violence.

The jury make no more scruple to pass against an Englishman and the queen, though it be to strain their oaths, than to drink milk unstrained.

Spenser's State of Ireland.

Prudes decay'd about may tuck,
Strain their necks with looking back. Swift.

5. To put to its utmost strength.

By this we see, in a cause of religion, to how desperate adventures men will strain themselves for relief of their own part, having law and authority against them. Hooker.

Too well I wote my humble vaine,
And how my rhimes been rugged and unkempt;
Yet as I can my cunning I will strain. Spenser.

Thus mine enemy fell,

And thus I set my foot on's neck;—even then
The princely blood flows in his cheek; he sweats,
Strains his young nerves, and puts himself in posture
That adds my words. Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

My earthly by his heavenly overpower'd,
Which it had long stood under, strain'd to th' height
In that celestial colloquy sublime,
As with an object that excels the sense,
Dazzled and spent, sank down. Mist. Parad. Lost.

Then

The lark and linner sing with rival notes;
They strain their warbling throats
To welcome in the spring. Dryden.

Nor yet content, the strains her malice more,
And adds newills to those contriv'd before. Dryden.
It is the worst sort of good husbandry for a father not to strain himself a little for his son's breeding. Locke.

Our words flow from us in a smooth continued stream, without those framings of the voice, motions of the body, and majesty of the hand, which are so much celebrated in the orators of Greece and Rome. Atterbury.

Strain'd to the root, the stooping forest pours
A rustling shower of yet untimely leaves. Thomson.

6. To make strait or tense.

A bigger string more strain'd, and a lesser string less strain'd, may fall into the same tone. Bacon.
Thou, the more he vailes forms, be aware
To strain his fetters with a silder care. Dryden's Virgil.

7. To push beyond the proper extent.

See they suffer death,
But in their deaths remember they are men,
Strain not the laws to make their torture grievous. Addison.

There can be no other meaning in this expression, however some may pretend to strain it. Swift.
Your way is to wrest and strain some principles, maintained both by them and me, to a sense repugnant with their other known doctrines. Waterland.

8. To force; to constrain; to make uneasy or unnatural.

The lark sings so out of tune,
Straining harsh discords and unpleasing sharps. Shakespeare.
He talks and plays with Fatime, but his mirth
Is forced and strain'd; in his looks appears
A wild untract'd fierceness. Denham.

9. STRAIN. v. n.

1. To make violent efforts.

To build his fortune I will strain a little,
For 'tis a bond in men. Shakespeare's Timon.
You stand like greyhounds in the slips,
Straining upon the start. Shakespeare's Henry V.
They strain,
That death may not them idly find attend
Their certain last, but work to meet their end. Daniel.

Straining with too weak a wing,
We need will write epistles to the king. Pope.

2. To be filtered by compression.

Cæsar thought that all sea sands had natural springs of fresh water; but it is the sea water; because the pit filled according to the measure of the tide; and the sea-water, passing or straining thro' the sands, leaveth the saltness behind them. Bacon.

STRAIN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. An injury by too much violence.

Credit is gained by custom, and seldom recovers
a strain; but, if broken, is never well set again. Temple.

In all pain there is a deformity by a solution of continuity, as in cutting; or a tendency to solution, as in convulsions or strains. Crew.

2. [Trenge, Saxon.] Race; generation; descent.

Thus far I can praise him; he is of a noble strain,
Of approv'd valour. Shakespeare.
Twelve Trojan youths, born of their noblest strain,
I took alive; and, yet enrag'd, will empty all their veins
Of vital spirits. Chapman's Iliad.

Why dost thou falsely feign
Thyself a Sidney? from which noble strain
He sprung, that could so far exalt the name Of love. Wallis.

Turn then to Pharamond and Charlemagne,
And the long heroes of the Gallic strain. Prior.

3. Hereditary disposition.

Amongst these sweet knaves and all this covetous
the strain of man's bred out into baboon and monkey. Shakespeare.

Intemperance and lust breed disease, which propagated, spoil the strain of a nation. Tillotson.

4. A style or manner of speaking.

According to the genius and strain of the book of Proverbs, the words wisdom and righteousness are used to signify all religion and virtue. Tillotson.
In our liturgy are as great strains of true sublime eloquence, as are any where to be found in our language. Swift.
Macrobius speaks of Hippocrates' knowledge in very lofty strains. Baker.

5. Song; note; found.

Wilt thou love such a woman? what, to make these an instrument, and play false strains upon thee? Shakespeare.

Orpheus' self may heave his head
From golden slumber on a bed
Of heathen Elysian flowers, and hear
Such strains as would have won the ear
Of Pluto, to have quite set free
His half-regain'd Eurydice. Milton.
Their heavenly harp a lower strain began,
And in soft music mourn the fall of man. Dryden.
When the first bold vessel dar'd the seas,
High on the stern the Thracian rais'd his strain;
While Argos saw her kindred trees Descend from Pelion to the main. Pope's St. Cecil.
Some future strain, in which the muse shall tell How Science dwindle, and how volumes swell. Young.

6. Rank; character.

But thou who, lately of the common strain,
Wert one of us, if still thou dost retain
The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Still thou art bound to vice, and still a slave. Dryden.

7. Turn; tendency; inborn disposition.

Because Heretics have a strain of madness, he applied her with some corporal chastisement, which with respite of time might haply reduce her to good order. Huyward.

8. Manner of speech or action.

Such take too high a strain at the first, and are magnanimous more than tract of years can uphold;
as was Scipio Africanus, of whom Livy saith,
"ultima primis cedebant." Bacon.

STRAINER. n. f. [from strain.] An instrument of filtration.

The excrementitious moisture passeth in birds through a finer and more delicate strainer than it doth in beasts; for feathers pass through quills, and hair through skin. Bacon.

Shave the goat's shaggy beard, lest thou too late
In vain shouldst seek a strainer to dispart
The husky terrer dregs from purer milk. Philips.

The stomach and intestines are the press, and the lacteal vessels the strainers, to separate the pure emulsion from its feces. Ambrosini.

These, when condens'd, the airy region pours
On the dry earth in rain or gentle showers;
Th' insinuating drops sink through the sand,
And pass the porous strainers of the land. Blackmore.

STRAIT. adj. [from French; stretto, Italian.]

1. Narrow; close; not wide.

Witnesses, like watches, go
Just as they're set, too fast or slow;
And, where in conscience they're straight laid,
'Tis ten to one that false is cast. Hudibras.

They are afraid to meet her, if they have mist the church; but then they are more afraid to see her, if they are faced as straight as they can possibly be. Low.

2. Close; intimate.

He, forgetting all former injuries, had received that naughty Plexirtus into a straight degree of favour; his goodness being as apt to be deceived, as the other's craft was to deceive. Sidney.

3. Strict; rigorous.

Therefore hold I straight all thy commandments;
and all false ways I utterly abhor. Psalm, C. v. P.
Fugitives are not relieved by the prod of their lands in England, for there is a straighter order taken. Spenser.

He now, forsooth, takes on him to reform
Some certain edicts, and some straight decrees
That lay too heavy on the commonwealth. Black.
Proceed no further 'gainst our uncle Gualter,
Than from the evidence of good esteem
He be approv'd in practice culpable. Shakespeare, VI.

4. Difficult; distressful.

It is used in opposition to crooked, but is then more properly written straight.
[See STRAIGHT.]

A bell or a cannon may be heard beyond a hill which intercepts the sight of the sounding body;
and sound are propagated as readily through a crooked pipe as through a straight one. Newton's Optics.

STRAIT. n. f.

1. A narrow pass, or strith.

Plant garbions to command the straight and narrow passages. Spenser.
Honour travels in a straight so narrow,
Where one but perils all. Shakespeare's Othello.
Fictum Magellanicum, or Magellan's strait. Philos.

They went forth unto the straits of the mountain tain. Job.

The Saracens brought, together with their torments, their language and religion into all that coast of Africa, even from Egypt to the straits of Gibraltar.
Brewster on Longinus, &c.

2. Distress; difficulty.

The independent party, which shew'd all motions towards peace, were in as great straits as the other how to carry on their designs. Chandler.

It was impossible to have administered such advice to the king, in the straits he was in, who, being pursued, might not have provid'd in consequence. Carew.

Thyself
Bred up in poverty and straits at home,
Lost in a defeat here, and hunger-bitten.

Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

Thus Adam, fore-bet, replied
O Heaven! in evil straits this day I stand Before my Judge. Milton's Paradise Lost.

'Tis hard with me, whatever choice I make,
I must not merit you; or must forsake
But in this straits to honour I'll be true,
And leave my fortune to the gods and you. Dryden.

Kings reduced to straits, either by their own, or by the negligence of their predecessors, have been always involved in dark and mean intrigues. Davenant.

Some modern authors, observing what straits they have been put to in all ages to find out water enough for Noah's flood, say Noah's flood was not universal, but a national inundation. Burns's Theory.

Let no man who owns a providence grow desperate under any calamity or strait whatever, but compute the anguish of his thoughts upon this or that consideration, that he comprehends not those strange unaccountable methods by which providence may dispose of him. South.

The straits to which you're driven, and as he knows

Cato's high worth, is anxious for your life. Addison.
Ulysses made use of the pretence of natural infirmity, to conceal the straits he was in at that time in his thoughts. Boileau.

She was his time of need and adversity, and, if she can discover that they are in straits of affliction, she gives them speedy relief. Boileau.

To STRAIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To put to difficulties.

If your last Interpretation should abuse, and call this
Your lack of love or bounty, you were straited
For a reply; at least, if you make care
Of happy good news. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

To STRAITEN. v. a. [from strait.]

1. To make narrow.

The strait of Gibraltar has a secure haven, yet with four tongs a strong fort entrance, straitened on the north side by the fast-bound wall of the mole. Sandy's Journey.

It

If this be our condition, thus to dwell
In narrow circuit, framed by a foe Subtle or violent. Alfred's Paradise Lost.
Who ever framed the vessel, to a the channels become more narrow, more heat, therefore that death and cold take root. Abbatine on Dante.

2. To contract; to confine.

The framing and continuing the profusion of the common law, most naturally extend and enlarge the power of the judiciary. Clarendon.

The good man finds himself aggrieved by the fading of his rent, and the framing of his for-ten, while the modest man keeps up his gain.

Locke.

Feeling can give us a notion of all ideas that enter in the eye, except colour, but it is very much framed and confined to the number, bulk, and distance of its objects. Addison.

3. To make tight; to intend. See STRAIGHT.

Stretch them at their length,
And pull the framed cords with all your strength.

Dryden.

Mortality, by her false guardians drawn,
Clims in fate, and casualty in laws,
Grips as the framed at each end the cord,
And dies when Dulmet gives her page the word.

Domine.

4. To deprive of necessary room.

Waters when framed, as in the falls of bridges, give a strong noise. Bacon's Natural History.

He could not be framed in room or provisions, or compelled to fight. Clarendon.

The airy crowd

Swarm'd, and were framed. Milton.

Several congregations find themselves very much framed; and, if the mode increase, I doubt may not drive many ordinary women into meetings.

Addison's Spectator.

5. To distress; to perplex.

Men, by continually striving and fighting to enlarge their bounds, and encroaching upon one another, seem to be framed for want of room. Ray.

STRAITH'NDED. adj. [from strait and band] Parsimonious; sparing; niggardly.

STRAITH'CID. adj. [from strait and law.]

thinks best, we have few well-shaped that are framed, or much tampered with. Locke on Education.

2. Stiff; constrained; without freedom.

STRAITLY. adv. [from strait.]

1. Narrowly.

2. Strictly; rigorously.

Those laws he straitly requireth to be observed without breach or crime. Hooker.

3. Closely; intimately.

STRAITNESS. n. f. [from strait.]

1. Narrowness.

The town was hard to besiege, and nearly to come unto, by reason of the straitness of all the places. 2 Maccabees xii.

It is a great error, and a narrowness or straitness of mind, if any man think that reason has nothing to do with another, except there be an union in society, or a conjunction in parts.

Bacon's New Organ.

The straitness of my conscience will not give me leave to swallow as a such camels. King Charles.

2. Strictness; rigour.

In his own life answer the straitness of his profession, it shall become him well. Shakespeare.

Among the Romans, the laws of the twelve tables did exclude the females from inheritance, and

We, like friendly colours, found our hearts unite,
And each from each contract new strength and light.

Pope.

7. Spirit; animation.

methinks I feel new strength within me rise,
Wings growing, and dominion given.

Milton.

Adam and first man in Eve
Had ended now their orisons, and found Strength added from above, new hope to spring
Out of despair.

Milton.

8. Vigour of writing; nervous diction; force, opposed to loquacity, in writing or painting.

Leave each to tune their own dull rhymes, and know,

What's roundly smooth, or languishingly flow;
And praise the easy vigour of a line,

Where Denham's strength and Waller's sweetness join.

Pope.

Caracci's strength, Coreggio's softer line,
Paulo's free stroke, and Titian's warmth divine.

Pope.

9. Potency of liquors.

10. Fortification; fortress.

The ramparts of talking should not only be retarded by the guard of our heart, but fenced in by certain strengths placed in the mouth.

He thought
This inaccessible high strength to have seiz'd.

Betray'd in all his strengths, the wood best,
All instruments, all arts, of ruin met.

Dryden.

11. Support; maintenance of power.

What they boded would be a mischief to us, you are providing shall be one of our principal strengths.

Spratt's Sermons.

12. Legal force; validity; security.

13. Confidence imparted.

Certain services were due from the soldier to his captain, and from the captain to the prince; and upon the strength of such tenure, in after times, the descendants of these people and their kings did subsist and make their wars.

Davenant.

The allies, after a successful summer, are too apt, upon the strength of it, to neglect their preparations for the ensuing campaign.

Addison.

14. Armament; force; power.

Edward's happy-order'd reign most fertile breeds
Plenty of mighty spirits, to strengthen his state. Daniel
TO STRENGTHEN. v. a. [from strength.]

1. To make strong.
2. To confirm; to establish.

Authority is by nothing to much strengthened but confirmed as by custom; for no man easily detests the things which he and all men have been always bred up to.

Temple.

These, bold Longinus! all the Nine inspire,
And bid your critic with a poet's fire:

An ardent judge, who, zealous in his trust,
With warmth gives sentence, yet is always just,

Whose own example strengthens all his laws,
And is himself that great boldness he draws.

If it were true that women were thus naturally vain and light, then how much more blameable is that education, which seems contrived to strengthen and increase this folly?

Lucan.

3. To animate; to fix in resolution.

Let us rise up and build: for they strengthened their hands for this work.

makes strong.

Gulick is a great strengthener of the stomach,
up in delays of appetite, or indigestion.

Temple.

2. [In medicine.] Strengtheners add to the bulk and firmness of the solids: cordials are such as drive on the vital actions;
but these such as confirm the stamina.

Quincy.

STRENGTHLESS. adj. [from strength.]

1. Wanting strength; deprived of strength.

Yet are these best, whose strengthless clay is numb,
Unable to support this lump of clay.

Shak. Hen. VI.

As the wretch, whose fever-weaken'd joints,
Like strengthless hinges, backle under lie,

Impatient of his sin, breaks like a fire
Out of his keeper's arms.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

2. Wanting potency; weak. Used of liquors.

This liquor must be inflammable or not, and yet subtle and pungent, which may be called spirit, or else strengthless or insipid, which may be named phlegm.

Boyle.

STRENUOUS adj. [strenuus, Latin.]

1. Brave; bold; active; valiant; dangerously laborious.

Nations grown corrupt

The stress of the table is up to the head of having a number of children. 1. Stress.

Thus, on which the great stress of the depends, would have been made out with reasons sufficient.

Locke.

2. Importance imputed; weight ascribed.

A body may as well say too little as too much stress upon a dream; but the less we need the more the better.

Locke.

It shewed how very little stress is to be laid upon the precedents they bring.

Locke.

Consider how great a stress he laid upon this duty, while upon earth, and how earnestly he recommended it.

Atterbury.

3. Violence; force, either acting or suffered.

By stress of weather driv'n,
At last they landed.

Dryden's Æneid.

Though the faculties of the mind are improved by exercise, yet they must not be put to a stress beyond their strength.

Locke.

And strow'd his mangled limbs about the field.

STREWMENT. n. f. [from strew.] Any thing scattered in decoration.

Her death was doubtful.—For charitable prayers,
Shards, flints, and pebbles should be thrown on her;
Yet here she is allow'd her virgin chaste,
Her maiden strewments, and the bringing home
Of bell and burial.

STRIFE. n. f. [Latin.] In natural history, the small channels in the shells of cockles and scallop.

The salt, leisurely committed to shoot of itself in the liquor, exposed to the open air, did shoot into more fair crystalline strife than those that were gained out of the remaining part of the same liquor by a more hasty evaporation.

STRIFE. adj. [from stria, Lat. stria, Fr.] Formed in striae.

These effluvia fly by striated atoms and winding particles, as Des Cartes conceiveth, or glide by streams attracted from either pole unto the equator.

Des Cartes imagines this earth once to have been a sun, and to the centre of a lesser vortex, whose axis still kept the same posture, by reason of the striated particles finding no fit pores for their passage, but only in this direction.

Crysil, when incorporated with the fibrous talcs, shows, it looks, a striated or fibrous texture, like those talcs.

That could endure the toothach patiently,
However they have writ the style of gods,
And make a pish at chance and sufferance. Shak.

3. Mode of painting.

The great style stands alone, and does not require, perhaps does not as well admit, any addition from inferior beauties. The ornamental style also possesses its own peculiar merit: however, though the union of the two may make a sort of composite style, yet that style is likely to be more imperfect than either of those which go to its composition. Rowley.

4. It is likewise applied to music.

5. Title; appellation.

Ford's a knave, and I will aggravate his style
thou shalt know him for knave and cuckold. Shakespeare.

Whether the style of Titan please thee more, Whole purple rays th' Achæments adore. Pope's Statius.

6. Course of writing. Unusual.

While his thougts the lingering day beguile,
To gentle Arcite let us turn our style. Dryden.

7. STYLE of Court, is properly the practice observed by any court in its way of proceeding. Ayliffe's Pargazon.

8. A pointed iron used anciently in writing on tables of wax.

9. Any thing with a sharp point; as a graver, the pin of a dial.

Placing two styles or needles of the same steel, touched with the same loadstone, when the one is removed but half a spar, the other would stand like Hercules's pillars. Brown.

10. The stalk which rises from amid the leaves of a flower.

Stylus is the middle prominent part of the flower of a plant, which adheres to the part of seed; its usually slender and long, whence it has its name. Quincy.

The figure of the flower-leaves, stamens, apices,
stylis, and seed-vessels. Key.

TO STYLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To call; to term; to name.

The chancellor of the exchequer they had no mind should be styled a knight. Clarendon.

It is not that to shall end

The strife which thou call'st evil, but we style The strife of glory. Milton's Paradise Lost.

For such a life, my actions

May style their own reward. Denham's Sophy.

Whoever backs his tenets with authorities, thinks he ought to carry the cause, and is ready to style it impudence in any one who shall stand out. Locke.

His conduct might have made him stil'd a

A father, and the nymph his child. Swift.

STYPTICK. adj. [stypticus, styptique, styptical.] French. This is usually, tho' erroneously, written stiptick. The same as astringent; but generally expresses the most efficacious sort of astringent, or those which are applied to stop hæmorrhages. Quincy.

Fruits of trees and shrubs contain plegm, oil, and an essential salt, by which they are sharp, sweet, sour, or styptick. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

There is a four styptick salt diffused through the earth, which passing a concoction in plants, becomes milier. Brown.

From spirit of salt, carefully dephlegmed and removed into lower glasses, having gently abstracted the whole, there remained in the bottom, and the neck of the retort, a great quantity of a certain dry and styptical substance, mostly of a yellowish colour. Boyle.

In an effusion of blood, having doffils ready dypt in the royal styptick, we applied them. Wijeman's Surgery.

STYPTICITY. n. f. The power of staunching blood.

Catharticks of mercurials precipitate the viscidities by their stypticity, and mix with all animal acids. Floyer.

TO STYTHY. v. a. [See STITHY.] To forge on an anvil.

By the forge that stythied Mars his helm, I'll kill thee every where, yea, o'er and o'er. Shak.

SUA'SIBLE. adj. [from suadeo, Lat.] Easy to be persuaded.

SUA'SIVE. adj. [from suadeo, Lat.] Having power to persuade.

It had the pissions in perfect subjection; and though its command over them was but suave and political, yet it had the force of coercion, and despotical. South.

SUA'SORY. adj. [suasorius, Lat.] Having tendency to persuade.

SUA'VITY. n. f. [suavitè, Fr. suavitas, Lat.]

1. Sweetness to the senses.

She desired them for rarity, pulchritude, and suavity. Brown.

2. Sweetness to the mind.

SUB, in composition, signifies a subordinate degree.

SUBACID. adj. [sub and acidus, Lat.] Sour in a small degree.

The juice of the Rem is like the chyle in the animal body, not subacridly concocted by circulation, and is commonly subacid in all plants. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

SUBACRID. adj. [sub and acrid.] Sharp and pungent in a small degree.

The green choler of a cow tasted sweet, bitter, subacrid, or a little pungent, and turned syrup of violets green. Floyer.

TO SUBACT. v. a. [subactus, Lat.] To reduce; to subdue.

Tragic bodies have no pleasure in the consort of air, but endeavour to subact it into a more subact. Bacon.

SUBACTION. n. f. [subactus, Lat.] The act of reducing to any state, as of mixing two bodies completely, or beating any thing to a very small powder.

There are of concoction two periods: the one assimilation, or absolute conversion and subaction; the other maturation; whereof the former is most conspicuous in living creatures, in which there is an absolute conversion and assimilation of the nourishment into the body. Bacon's Natural History.

SUBALTERN. adj. [subalternus, French.] Inferiour; subordinate; that which in different respects is both superior and inferiour. It is used in the army of all officers below a captain.

Love's subalterns, a duteous band,
Like watchmen round their chief appear;
Each had his lantern in his hand,
And Venus, mask'd, brought up the rear. Prior.

There had like to have been a duel between two subalterns, upon a dispute which should be governor of Portsmouth. Addison.

One, while a subaltern officer, was every day complaining against the pride of colonels towards their officers; yet, after he received his commission for a regiment, he confessed the spirit of colonelship was coming fast upon him, and it daily increased to his death. Swift.

This sort of universal ideas, which may either be considered as a genus or species, is called subaltern. Watts.

SUBALTERNATE. adj. [subalternus, Latin.] Succeeding by turns. D'A.

SUBASTRINGENT. adj. [sub and astringent.] Astringent in a small degree.

SUBBEADLE. n. f. [sub and beadle.] An under beadle.

They ought not to execute those precepts by simple messengers, or subbeadles, but in their own persons. Ascham.

SUBCELESTIAL. adj. [sub and celestial.] Placed beneath the heavens.

The most refined glories of subcelestial excellencies are but more faint resemblances of these. Glanville.

SUBCHAN'CEL. n. f. [sub and chanter; succentor, Lat.] The deputy of the precentor in a cathedral.

SUBCLAVIAN. adj. [sub and clavus, Latin.]

Subclavian is applied to any thing under the armpit or shoulder, whether artery, nerve, vein, or muscle. Quincy.

The liver, though seated on the right side, yet, by the subclavian division, doth equidistantly communicate its activity unto either arm. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The chyle first mixeth with the blood in the subclavian vein, and enters with it into the heart, where it is very imperfectly mixed, there being no mechanism nor fermentation to convert it into blood, which is effected by the lungs. Arbuthnot.

SUBCONSTELLATION. n. f. [sub and constellation.] A subordinate or secondary constellation.

As to the picture of the seven stars, if thereby he meant the Pleiades, or subconstellation upon the back of Taurus, with what congruity they are described, in a clear night an ordinary eye may discover. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SUBCONTRACTED. part. adj. [sub and contracted.] Contracted after a former contract.

You claim,
I bar it in the interest of my wife;
'Tis he is subcontracted to this lord,
And I her husband contract with your banes. Shakespeare's King Lear.

SUBCONTRARY. adj. [sub and contrary.] Contrary in an inferior degree.

If two particular propositions differ in quality, they are subcontraries; as, some vine is a tree; some vine is not a tree. These may be both true together, but they can never be both false. Watts.

SUBCUTANEOUS. adj. [sub and cutaneous.] Lying under the skin.

SUBDEACON. n. f. [subdeaconus, Latin.]

In the Romish church they have a subdeacon, who is the deacon's servant. Ascham's Paragon.

SUBDEAN. n. f. [subdecanus, Lat.] The vicegerent of a dean.

Whenever the dean and chapter confirm any act, that such confirmation may be valid, the dean must join in person, and not in the person of a deputy or subdean only. Ascham.

SUBDECUPLE. adj. [sub and decuplus, Lat.] Containing one part of ten.

SUBDERISORIOUS. adj. [sub and derisor.] Scoffing or ridiculing with tenderness and delicacy. Not used.

This subderisorous mirth is far from giving any offence to us; it is rather a pleasant condiment of our conversation. Morre.

SUBDITITIOUS. adj. [subditivus, Latin.] Put secretly in the place of something else.

TO SUBDIVERSIFY. v. a. [sub and diversify.] To diversify again what is already diversified.

The same wool one man felts into a hat, another weaves it into cloth, another into arras, and these variously subdiversified according to the fancy of the artificer. Hale.

TO SUBDIVIDE. v. a. [subdiviser, Fr. sub and divide.] To divide a part into yet more parts.

In the rise of eight, in tones, there be two becmols, or half notes; so, as if you divide the tones equally, the eight is but seven whole and equal notes; and if you subdivide that into half notes, as in the stops of a lute, it maketh the number thirteen. Bacon's Natural History.

When Brutus and Cassius were overthrown, soon after Antonius and Octavianus brake and subdivided. Bacon.

The glad father glories in his child,
When he can subdivide a fraction. Roscommon.

When the progenies of Cham and Japhet swarmed into colonies, and those colonies were subdivided into many others, in time their descendants lost the primitive rites of divine worship, retaining only the notion of one deity. Dryden.

SUBDIVISION. n. f. [subdivision, Fr. from subdivide.]

1. The act of subdividing.

When any of the parts of any idea are farther divided, in order to a clear explication of the whole, this is called a subdivision; as when a year is divided into months, each month into days, and each day into hours, which may be farther subdivided into minutes and seconds. Watts's Logic.

2. The parts distinguished by a second division.

How can we see such a multitude of souls cast under so many subdivisions of misery, without reflecting on the absurdity of a government that sacrifices the happiness of so many reasonable beings to the glory of one? Addison.

In the decimal table the subdivisions of the cubit, as span, palm, and digit, are deduced from the shorter cubit. Arbuthnot.

SUBDOLOUS. adj. [subdolos, Lat.] Cunning; subtle; sly.

TO SUBDUCE. v. a. [subduco, subductus, Latin.]

1. To withdraw; to take away.

Of nature fail'd in man and lost some part
Not proof enough such object to sustain;

Or, from my side subductions, took perhaps More than enough. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. To subfract by arithmetical operation.

Take the other operation of arithmetick, subtraction: if out of that supposed infinite multitude of antecedent generations we should subduce ten, the residue must be less by ten than it was before, and yet still the quotient must be infinite. Hale.

SUBDUCTION. n. s. [from subducere.]

1. The act of taking away.

Possibly the Divine beneficence subducing that influence which it communicated from the time of their first creation, they were kept in a state of immortality till that moment of the subduction. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. Arithmetical subtraction.

Suppose we take the other operation of arithmetick, subduction: if out of that infinite multitude of antecedent generations we should subduce ten, the residue must be less by ten than it was before that subduction, and yet still the quotient be infinite. Hale.

TO SUBDUCE. v. a. [from subdo, or subjugo, Latin.]

1. To crush; to oppress; to sink; to overpower.

Nothing could have subdued nature
To such a lowliness, but his unkind daughters. Shakespeare's

Them that rose up against me hast thou subdued
under me. 2 Sam. xxi. 40.

If aught were worthy to subdue
The soul of man. Milton.

2. To conquer; to reduce under a new dominion.

Be fruitful and replenish the earth, and subdue it. Gen. i. 28.

Augustus Cæsar subdued Egypt to the Roman empire. Pea. b.

To overcome in battle, and subdue
Nations, and bring home spoils. Milton.

The Romans made those times the standard of their wit, when they subdued the world. Spratt.

3. To tame; to subast; to break.

Nor is't unwholesome to subdue the land
By often exercise; and where before
You broke the earth, again to plow. May's Virgil.

SUBDU'EMENT. n. s. [from subducere.] Conquest. A word not used, nor worthy to be used.

I have seen thee,
As hot as Persius, spur thy Phrygian steed, Bravely despising forlets and subduements. Shakespeare's SUBDU'ER. n. s. [from subducere.] Conqueror; tamer.

Great god of might, that reigneth in the mind,
And all the body to thy left dost frame;
Victor of gods, subduer of mankind,
That dost the lions and fell tigers tame,
Who can express the glory of thy might? Spenser.

Their curious eye
Discerns their great subducer's awful mien
And corresponding features fall. Philips

Figs are great subducers of acrimony, useful in hoarseness and coughs, and extremely emollient. Arbuthnot.

SUBDU'PLE. } adj. [subduplex, Fr.
SUBDUPLICATE. } sub. and duplus, Latin.] Containing one part of two.

As one of these under pulkys doth abate half of that heaviness which the weight hath in itself, and cause the power to be a subduplex proportion unto it, so two of them do abate half of that which remains, and cause a subquadruple proportion, and three a subsextuple. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

The motion, generated by the forces in the whole passage of the body or thing through that space, shall be in a subduplicate proportion of the forces. Newton's Opticks.

SUBJACENT. adj. [subjacens, Latin.]

Lying under.

The superficial parts of mountains are washed away by rains, and borne down upon the subjacent plains. Woodward.

TO SUBJEC'T. v. a. [subjicere, Latin.]

1. To put under.

The angel
Led them direct, and down the cliff as fast
To the subjacent plain. Milton.

The medal bears each form and name:
In one short view, subjunct to our eye,
God's, emperors, heroes, sages, beauties lie. Pope.

2. To reduce to submission; to make subordinate; to make submissive.

Think not, young warriors, your diminish'd name
Shall lose of lustre, by subjuncting rage
To the cool dictates of experience's age. Dryden.

3. To enslave; to make obnoxious.

I live on bread like you, feel want like you,
Taste grief, need friends, like you: subjunct thus,
How can you say to me I am a king? Shakespeare's Richard II.

I see thee, in that fatal hour,
Subjunct to the victor's cruel power,
Led hence a slave. Dryden.

The blind will always be led by those that see, or fall into the ditch: and he is the most subjunct,
the most enslaved, who is so in his understanding. Locke.

4. To expose; to make liable.

If the vessels yield, it subjuncts the person to all the inconveniencies of an erroneous circulation. Arbuthnot.

5. To submit; to make accountable.

God is not bound to subjunct his ways of operation to the scrutiny of our thoughts, and confine himself to do nothing but what we must comprehend. Locke.

6. To make subservient.

He subjunct to man's service angel wings. Mil.

SUBJECT. adj. [subjectus, Latin.]

1. Placed or situated under.

The eastern tower,
Whose height commands, as subject, all the vale
To see the fight. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

2. Living under the dominion of another.

Esaú was never subject to Jacob, but founded a distinct people and government, and was himself prince over them. Locke.

Christ, since his incarnation, has been subject to the Father; and will be so also in his human capacity, after he has delivered up his mediatorial kingdom. Waterland.

3. Exposed; liable; obnoxious.

Most subject is the tattlest soil to weeds;
And he the noble image of my youth
Is overpread with them. Shakespeare's

All human things are subject to decay,
And when fate summons monarchs must obey. Dryden.

4. Being that on which any action operates, whether intellectual or material.

I enter into the subject matter of my discourse. Dryden.

SUBJECT. n. s. [subject, French.]

1. One who lives under the dominion of another: opposed to governor.

Every subject's duty is the king's,
But every subject's soul is his own. Shak. Hen. V.

Never subject long'd to be a king,
As I do long and wish to be a subject. Shak. H. VI.

Those I call subjects which are governed by the ordinary laws and magistrates of the sovereign. Davies.

We must understand and confess a king to be a father, a subject to be a son; and therefore honour to be by nature most due from the natural subject to the natural king. Locke.

The subject must obey his prince, because God commands it, human laws require it. Swift.

Were subjects so but only by their choice,
And not from birth did forc'd dominion take,
Our prince alone would have the public voice. Dryden.

Heroick kings, whose high perfections have made them awful to their subjects, can struggle with and subdue the corruption of the times. Davenant.

2. That on which any operation, either mental or material, is performed.

Now spurs the lated traveller space
To gain the timely inn, and near approaches
The subject of our watch. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

This subject for heroick song pleased me. Milton.

Here he would have us fix our thoughts; nor are they too dry a subject for our contemplation. Dancy of Piety.

I will not venture on so nice a subject with my severe style. Mor.

Make choice of a subject beautiful and noble, which, being capable of all the graces that colour and elegance of design can give, shall afford a perfect art an ample field of matter wherein to expatiate. Dryden.

The subject of a proposition is that concerning which any thing is affirmed or denied. Watts's Logic.

My real design is, that of publishing your praises to the world; not upon the subject of your noble birth. Swift.

3. That in which any thing inheres or exists.

Anger is certainly a kind of baseness, as it appears well in the weakness of those subjects in whom it reigns, children, women, old folks, sick folks. Baron.

4. [In grammar.] The nominative case to a verb is called by grammarians the subject of the verb. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

SUBJAC'TION. n. s. [from subjicere.]

1. The act of subduing.

After the conquest of the kingdom, and subjection of the rebels, enquiry was made who there were, that, fighting against the king, had saved themselves by flight. Hale.

2. [from subjectionem, Fr.] The state of being under government.

Because the subjection of the body to the will is by natural necessity, the subjection of the will unto God voluntary, we therefore stand in need of direction after what sort our wills and desires may be rightly conformed to his. Hooker.

How hard it is now for him to frame himself to subjection, that, having once set before his eyes the hope of a kingdom, hath found encouragement. Spenser.

Both in subjection now to sensual appetite. Mil.

SUBJECTIVE. adj. [from subjicere.] Relating not to the object, but the subject.

Certainty, according to the schools, is distinguished into objective and subjective: objective is when the proposition is certainly true in itself; and subjective, when we are certain of the truth of it. Watts.

SUBINGRESS'ION. n. s. [sub and ingressus, Latin.] Secret entrance.

The pressure of the ambient air is strengthened upon the accession of the air sucked out; which forceth the neighbouring air to a violent subingress of its parts. Boyle.

TO SUBJOIN. v. a. [sub and joindre, Fr. subjungo, Latin.] To add at the end; to add afterwards.

He makes an excuse from ignorance, the only thing that could take away the fault; namely, that he knew not that he was the high-priest, and subjoins a reason. South.

SUBITANEOUS. adj. [subitanens, Latin.] Sudden; hasty.

TO SUBJUGATE. v. a. [subjugare, Fr. subjugo, Latin.] To conquer; to subdue; to bring under dominion by force.

O favorite virgin, that hast wund'ring the bright Whole foreign d'nesses subjugate the east! Pope.
He *subjugate*d a king, and called him his vassal. Baker.

SUBJUGATION. n. f. [from subjugate.] The act of subduing.

This was the condition of the learned part of the world, after the subjugation by the Turks. Hale.

SUBJUNCTION. n. f. [from subjungo, Latin.] The state of being subjoined; the act of subjoining.

The verb undergoes in Greek a different formation; and in dependence upon, or subjunction to, some other verb. Clarke.

SUBJUNCTIVE. adj. [subjunctivus, Lat. subjunctif, French.]

1. Subjoined to something else.

2. [In grammar.]

The verb undergoes a different formation, to signify the same intentions as the indicative, yet not absolutely, but relatively to some other verb, which is called the subjun. verb. mood. Clarke.

SUBLAPSA RIAN. adj. [sub and lapsus, Latin.] Done after the fall of man.

The degree of reprobation, according to the sublapsarian doctrine, being nothing else but a mere preterition or non election of some persons whom God left as he found, involved in the guilt of the first Adam's transgression, without any actual personal sin of their own, when he withdrew from others as guilty as they. Hammond.

SUBLATION. n. f. [sublatio, Latin.] The act of taking away.

SUBLIVATION. n. f. [sublevo, Latin.] The act of raising on high.

SUBLIMABLY. adj. [from sublime.] Possible to be sublimed.

SUBLIMABLENESS. n. f. [from sublimabile.] Quality of admitting sublimation. He obtained another concrete as to taste and smell, and easily *sublimable*ness, as common salt ammoniac. Boyle.

TO SUBLIMATE. v. a. [from sublime.]

1. To raise by the force of chemical fire.

2. To exalt; to heighten; to elevate.

And this actions rule, for aye they fill their vein
In words, while weight best suits a sublimed strain. Dryden.

Not only the gross and insipid souls, but the most acrid and sublimed, are rather the more proper fuel for an immaterial fire. Dryden of Piety.

The precepts of Christianity are for exalted and refined, and to apt to cleanse and sublimat the more gross and corrupt, as thews flesh and blood never revealed it. Dryden of Piety.

SUBLIMATE. n. f. [from sublime.]

1. Any thing raised by fire in the retort.

Enquire the manner of subliming, and what metals endure subliming, and what body the sublimat makes. Bacon.

2. Quicksilver raised in the retort.

SUBLIMATE. v. f. Raised by fire in the vessel.

The particles of mercury, uniting with the acid particles of spirit of salt, compose mercury sublimat; and, with the particles of sulphur, emerald. Newton's Optics.

SUBLIMATION. n. f. [sublimatio, Fr. from sublimat.]

1. A chemical operation which raises bodies in the vessel by the force of fire.

Sublimation differs very little from distillation; differing that in distillation only the fluid parts of bodies are raised, but in this the solid and dry; and that the matter to be distilled may be either solid or fluid, but sublimation is only concerned about solid substances. There is also another difference, namely, that sublimation, which is of very great use in distillation, has hardly any room in sublimation: for the substances which are to be sublimed, being solid, are incapable of rarefaction; and so it is only impulse that can raise them. Runyon.

Separation is wrought by weight, as in the distillation of liquors, by heat, by precipitation, or sublimation; that is, a calling of the several parts up or down, which is a kind of attraction. Bacon's Natural History.

Since oil of sulphur per campanum is of the same nature with oil of vitriol, may it not be inferred that sulphur is a mixture of volatile and fixed parts, so strongly cohering by attraction, as to ascend together by sublimation? Newton's Optics.

2. Exaltation; elevation; act of heightening or improving.

Bodies to spirits, by sublimation strange. Dennis.
Shall he pretend to religious attainments, who is defective and short in moral, which are but the rudiments and first draught of religion, as religion is the perfection, refinement, and sublimation of morality? South.

SUBLIME. adj. [sublimis, Latin.]

1. High in place; exalted aloft.

'They turn'd their pens, and leaving th' air sublime
With clang despoil'd the ground. Milton.
Sublime on these a tower of steel is rear'd,
And dire Tiphone there keeps the ward. Dryden.

2. High in excellence; exalted by nature.

My earthly strain'd to the height
In that celestial colloquy sublime. Milton.
Can it be, that souls sublime
Return to visit our terrestrial clime?

And that the generous mind, releas'd by death,
Can covet lazy limbs? Dryden.

3. High in style or sentiment; lofty; grand.

Early in stile thy work, in sense sublime. Pope.
Elevated by joy.

4. Elevated by joy.

All yet left of that exalted rout,
Hav'n-fall'n, in station stood or just array,
Sublime was the position. Milton.

5. Lofty of mien; elevated in manner.

He was sublime, and almost tumorous, in his looks and gestures. Watson.
His fair large front and eye sublime declar'd Absolute rule. Milton.

SUBLIME. n. f. The grand or lofty stile.

The sublime is a Gallicism, but now naturalized.

Longinus strengthens all his laws,
And is himself the great sublime he draws. Pope.

The sublime rises from the nobleness of thoughts, the magnificence of the words, or the harmonious and lively turn of the phrase; the perfect sublime arises from all three together. Addison.

TO SUBLIME. v. a. [sublimare, Fr. from the adjective.]

1. To raise by a chemical fire.

Study our manuscripts, those myriads
Of letters, which have pass'd 'twixt thee and me;
Thence write our annals, and in them lessons be
To all, whom love's subliming fire invades. Donne.

2. To raise on high.

Although thy trunk be neither large nor strong,
Nor can thy head, not help'd, itself sublime,
Yet, like a serpent, a tall tree can climb. Denham.

3. To exalt; to heighten; to improve.

Flow's, and then fruit,
Man's nourishment, by gradual scale sublim'd,
To vital spirits aspire. Milton.
The faculties of most are moved by the inward Springs of the corporeal machine, which, even in the most sublimed intellectuals, is dangerously influential. Glauville.

Art, being strengthened by the known age of things, may pass into nature by slow degrees, and to be sublimed into a pure genius, which is capable of distinguishing betwixt the beauties of nature and that which is low in her. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Meanly they seek the blessing to confine,
And force that sun but on a part to shine;
Which not alone the southern wit sublimes,
But ripens spirits in cold northern climes. Pope.

TO SUBLIME. v. m. To rise in the chemical vessel by the force of fire.

The particles of sal ammoniac in sublimation carry up the particles of antimony, which will not sublime alone. Newton's Optics.

This salt is fixed in a gentle fire, and sublimes in a great one. Arbutnot on Almonds.

SUBLIMELY. adv. [from sublime.] Loftily; grandly.

In English lays, and all sublimely great,
Thy Homer charms with all his ancient heat. Parnell.

Fustian's so sublimely bad,

It is not poetry, but prose run mad. Pope.

SUBLIMENESS. n. f. [sublimitas, Lat.]

The same as sublimity.

SUBLIMITY. n. f. [from sublime; sublimité, Fr. sublimitas, Lat.]

1. Height of place; local elevation.

2. Height of nature; excellence.

As religion looketh upon him who in majesty and power is infinite, as we ought we account not of it, unless we esteem it even according to that very height of excellency which our hearts conceive, when divine sublimity itself is rightly considered. Hoker.

In respect of God's incomprehensible sublimity and purity, this is also true, that God is neither a mind nor a spirit like other spirits, nor a light such as can be discerned. Raleigh.

3. Loftiness of style or sentiment.

Milton's distinguishing excellence lies in the sublimity of his thoughts, in the greatness of which he triumphs over all the poets, modern and ancient, Homer only excepted. Addison.

SUBLINGUAL. adj. [sublingual, French; sub and lingua, Latin.] Placed under the tongue.

Those subliming humours should be intercepted, before they mount to the head, by sublingual pills. Harvey.

SUBLUNAR. adj. [sublunaire, Fr. sub and luna, Latin.] Situated beneath the moon; earthly; terrestrial; of this world.

Dull sublunary lovers! love,
Whose soul is sense, cannot admit Of absence, 'cause it doth remove
The thing which elemented it. Donne.

Night measur'd, with her shadowy cone,
Half way up hill this vast sublunary vault. Milton.

Thou'less of knowledge we our course advance,
Discovering still new worlds of ignorance;
And these discoveries make us all confess
That sublunary science is but guess. Denham.

The celestial bodies above the moon, being not subject to chance, remain in perpetual order, while all things sublunary are subject to change. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Ovid had warn'd her to beware
Of strolling gods, whose usual trade is,
Under presence of taking air,
To pick up sublunary ladies. Swift.

The fan philosopher to Rowley flies,
Where in a box the whole creation lies;
She sees the planets in their turns advance,
And scorns, Poltier, this sublunary dance. Young.

SUBMARINE. adj. [sub and mare, Lat.]

Lying or acting under the sea.

This contrivance may seem difficult, because these submarine navigators will want winds and tides for motion, and the sight of the heavens for direction. Wilkins.

Not only the herbaceous and woody submarine plants, but also the lithophytes, affect this manner of growing, as I observed in corals.

Ray on the Creation.

TO SUBMERGE. v. a. [submerger, Fr. submergo, Lat.] To drown; to put under water.

So half my Egypt was submerg'd, and made A cistern for scald snakes. Shak. Ant. and Cleop.

SUBMERSION. n. f. [submerison, Fr. from submerfus, Lat.] The act of drowning; state of being drowned.

The great Atlantick island is mentioned in Plato's Timæus, almost contiguous to the western parts of Spain and Africa, yet wholly swallowed up by that ocean; which, if true, might afford a passage from Africa to America by land before that submerison. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

TO SUBMINISTER. v. a. [submini

TO SUBMINISTRATE. v. a. [subministrare, Latin.] To supply; to afford. A word not much in use.

Some things have been discovered, not only by the industry of mankind, but even the inferior animals have subministrated unto man the invention of many things, natural, artificial, and medicinal. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Nothing subministrates after matter to be converted into pestilent seminaries, than streams of nasty folks. Harvey.

TO SUBMINISTER. v. n. To subserve.

Passions, as fire and water, are good servants, but bad masters, and subminister to the best and worst purposes. L'Estrange.

SUBMISS. adj. [from submissus, Latin.] Humble; submissive; obsequious.

King James, mollified by the bishop's submiss and eloquent letters, wrote back, that though he were in part moved by his letters, yet he should not be fully satisfied except he spoke with him.

Bacon's Henry VII.

Nearer his presence, Adam, though not aw'd,
Yet with submiss approach, and reverence meek,
As to a superior nature, bowed low. Milt. Par. Lost.

Rejoicing, but with awe,

In adoration at his feet I fell
Submiss; he rear'd me. Milton.

SUBMISSION. n. f. [submission, Fr. from submissus, Lat.]

1. Delivery of himself to the power of another.

Submission, dauphin! 'tis a mere French word;
We English warriors wot not what it means. Shakespeare.

2. Acknowledgment of inferiority or dependance; humble or suppliant behaviour.

In all submission and humility
York doth present himself unto your highness. Shakespeare.

Great prince, by that submission you'll gain more Than e'er your haughty courage won before. Halifax.

3. Acknowledgment of a fault; confession of error.

Be not as extreme in submission, as in offence. Shakespeare.

4. Obsequiousness; resignation; obedience.

No duty in religion is more justly required by God Almighty, than a perfect submission to his will in all things. Temple.

SUBMISSIVE. adj. [submissus, Latin.] Humble; testifying submission or inferiority.

On what submissive message art thou sent? Shak.
Her at his feet submissive in distress
He thus with peaceful words uprais'd. Milton.

Sadden from the golden throne
With a submissive step I halted down;
The glowing garland from my hair I took,
Love in my heart, obedience in my look. Prior.

SUBMISSIVELY. adv. [from submissive.] Humbly; with confession of inferiority.

The goddess,
Soft in her tone, submissively replies. Dryd. Æn.
But speech ev'n there submissively withheld, as
From rights of subject, and the poor man's cause,
Then pompous silence reigns, and stills the noisy laws. Pope.

SUBMISSIVENESS. n. f. [from submissive.] Humility; confession of fault or inferiority.

If thou sin in wine and wantonness,
Boast not thereof, nor make thy shame thy glory,
Frailty gets pardon by submissiveness,
But he that boasts shuns that out of his story;
He makes flat war with God, and doth defy,
With his poor clod of earth, the spacious sky. Herbert.

SUBMISSLY. adv. [from submiss.] Humbly; with submission.

Humility consists, not in wearing mean cloath, and going lorty and submissly, but in mean opinion of thyself. Taylor.

TO SUBMIT. v. a. [soumettre, Fr. submitto, Latin.]

1. To let down; to sink.

Sometimes the hull submits itself a while
In small descents, which do its height beguile;
And so to mounds mounts, but so as billows play,
Whole rise not hinders but makes short our way. Dryden.

Neptune stood,
With all his bolts of waters at command,
Beneath them to submit th' officious flood,
And with his trident shov'd them off the land. Dryden.

2. To subject; to resign without resistance to authority.

Return to thy mistress, and submit thyself under her hands. Genesis, xvi. 9.

Christian people submit themselves to conformable observance of the awful and religious constitutions of their spiritual rulers. White.

Will ye submit your neck, and chuse to bend
The supple knee? Milton.

3. To leave to discretion; to refer to judgment.

Whether the censure of the clergy be able to bear a heavy burden, is submitted to the house. Swift.

TO SUBMIT. v. n. To be subject; to acquiesce in the authority of another; to yield.

To thy husband's will Thine shall submit; he over thee shall rule. Milton.
Our religion requires from us, not only to forego pleasure, but to submit to pain, disgrace, and even death. Rogers.

SUBMULTIPLE. n. f. A submultiple number or quantity is that which is contained in another number a certain number of times exactly; thus 3 is submultiple of 21, as being contained in it seven times exactly. Harris.

SUBOCTAVE. adj. [sub and octavus, Lat. and octuple.] Containing one part of eight.

As one of these under pulleys abates half of that heaviness of the weight, and caus's the power to be in a subdouble proportion; to two of them abate half of that which remains, and cause a subquadruple proportion, three a subsextuple, four a suboctuple. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

Had they erected the cube of a foot for their principal concave, and geometrically taken its suboctave, the congrus, from the cube of half a foot, they would have divided the congrus into eight parts, each of which would have been regularly the cube of a quarter foot; their well-known paim: this is the course taken for our gallon, which has the pint for its suboctave. Alfabnor in Corn.

SUBORDINACY. n. f. [from subordi- SUBORDINANCY. n. f. [from subordi- the proper and analogous word.]

Pursuing the imagination through all its extravagancies, is no improper method of correcting, and bringing it to act in subordinacy to reason. Spectator.

2. Series of subordination.

The subordinacy of the government changing hands so often, makes an untidiness in the pursuit of the publick interests. Temple.

SUBORDINATE. adj. [sub and ordinatus, Latin.]

1. Inferiour in order, in nature, in dignity, or power.

It was subordinate, not enslaved, to the understanding, not as a servant to a master, but as a queen to her king, who acknowledges a subjection, yet retains a majesty. South.

Whether dark profyes of the night proceed from any latent power of the soul during her abstraction, or from any operation of subordinate spirits, has been a dispute. Addison.

2. Descending in a regular series.

The two armies were assigned to the leading of two generals, rather courtiers than martial men, yet assisted with subordinate commanders of great experience. Bacon.

His next subordinate

Awak'ning, thus to him in secret spoke. Milton.
These carry such plain characters of disaffection or affinity, that the several kinds and subordinate species of each are easily distinguished. Forster.

TO SUBORDINATE. v. a. [sub and ordino, Latin.] To range under another. Not in use, but proper and elegant.

If I have subordinated (sculpture and sculpture to architecture, as then mistress, so there are other inferior arts subordinate to them. Wotton.

SUBORDINATELY. adv. [from subordinate.] In a series regularly descending.

It being the highest step of ill, to which all others subordinately tend, one would think it could be capable of no improvement. De la Haye.

SUBORDINATION. n. f. [subordination, Fr. from subordinate.]

1. The state of being inferiour to another.

Not can a council national decide,
But with subordination to her guide. Dryden.

2. A series regularly descending.

The natural creatures having a local subordination, the rational having a political, and sometimes a sacred. Hoyday.

3. Place of rank.

If we would suppose a ministry where every single person was of distinguished piety, and all great officers of state and law diligent in chusing persons who in their several subordinations would be obliged to follow the examples of their superiors, the empire of iniquity would be soon destroyed. Swift.

TO SUBORN. v. a. [suborner, Fr. suborno, Latin.]

1. To procure privately; to procure by secret collusion.

His judges were the self-same men by whom his accusers were suborned. Hobbes.

Fond wretch! thou know'st not what thou speakest.

Or else thou art suborn'd against his honour
In natural piety. Shakespeare.

R don may meet
Some species object, by the too suborn'd,
And fall into deception. Milton.

His awful bottom heaves dissembled sighs;
And tears suborn'd fall dropping from his eyes. Prior.

3. The act or state of contributing to any undertaking.

The work he plied;
Stocks and subscriptions pour on ev'ry side. Pope.
South-sea subscriptions take who please,
Leave me but liberty. Pope.

4. Subscription; obedience. Not in use.

I tax not you, you elements, with unkindness;
I never gave you kingdom, call'd you children;
You owe me no subscription. Shakespeare's King Lear.

SUBSECTION. n. f. [sub and sectio, Lat.] A subdivision of a larger section into a lesser; section of a section. Dict.

SUBSECUTIVE. adj. [from subsequor, Lat.] Following in train.

SUBSEPTUPLE. adj. [sub and septuplus, Lat.] Containing one of seven parts.

If unto this lower pulley there were added another, then the power would be unto the weight in a subseptuple proportion; if a third, a subseptuple. Wilkins.

SUBSEQUENCE. n. f. [from subsequor, Lat.] The state of following; not precedence.

By this faculty we can take notice of the order of precedence and subsequence in which they are past. Grew.

SUBSEQUENT. adj. [subsequent, Fr. subsequens, Lat.] This word is improperly pronounced long in the second syllable by Shakespeare. Following in train; not preceding.

In such indexes, although small prices
To their subsequent volumes, there is seen
The baby figure of the giant mass
Of things to come, at large. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

The subsequent words come on before the precedent vanish. Bacon.

Why does each consenting sign
With prudent harmony combine
In turns to move, and subsequent appear
To gird the globe and regulate the year? Prior.

This article is introduced as subsequent to the treaty of Munster, made about 1648, when England was in the utmost confusion. Swift.

SUBSEQUENTLY. adv. [from subsequent.] Not so as to go before; so as to follow in train.

To men in governing most things fall out accidentally, and come not into any compliance with their preconceived ends; but they are forced to comply subsequently, and to strive in with things as they fall out, by posthumous after-applications of them to their purposes. South.

TO SUBSERVE. v. a. [subservio, Lat.] To serve in subordination; to serve instrumentally.

Not made to rule,
But to subserve where wisdom bears command. Milton.

It is a greater credit to know the ways of captivating nature, and making her subserve our purposes, than to have learned all the intrigues of policy. Glanville.

The memory hath no special part of the brain devoted to its own service, but uses all those parts which subserve our sensations, as well as our thinking powers. Walsh.

SUBSERVIENCE. n. f. [from subserve.]

SUBSERVIENCY. n. f. Instrumental fitness, use, or operation.

Wicked spirits may by their cunning carry further in a learning confederacy or subserviency to the design of a good angel. Dryden.

There is an immediate and agill subserviency of the spirits to the empire of the soul. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

We cannot look upon the body, wherein appears so much fitness, use, and subserviency to infinite functions, any otherwise than as the effect of contrivance. Bentley.

There is a regular subordination and subserviency among all the parts to beneficial ends. Cibyn's Philosophical Principles.

SUBSERVIENT. adj. [subserviens, Latin.] Subordinate; instrumentally useful.

Hammond had an incredible dexterity, scarce ever reading any thing which he did not make subservient in one kind or other. Fell.

Philosophers and common heathens believed one God, to whom all things are referred; but under this God they worshipped many inferior and subservient gods. Stillingfleet.

These ranks of creatures are subservient one to another, and the most of them serviceable to man. Ray.

While awake, we feel none of those motions continually made in the disposal of the corporeal principles subservient herein. Grew.

Sense is subservient unto fancy, fancy unto intellect. Grew.

We are not to consider the world as the body of God; he is an unform being, void of organs, members, or parts; and they are his creatures, subordinate to him, and subservient to his will. Newton's Opticks.

Most critics, fond of some subservient art, still make the whole depend upon a part. They talk of principles, but notions praise, And all to one lov'd tolliv sacrifice. Pope.

SUBSEXTUPLE. adj. [sub and sextuplus, Lat.] Containing one part of six.

One of these under pulleys abates half of that heaviness the weight hath, and causes the power to be in a subdouble proportion unto it, two of them a subquadruple proportion, three a subsextuple. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

TO SUBSIDE. v. n. [subsido, Lat.] To sink; to tend downwards. It is commonly used of one part of a compound, sinking in the whole. Pope has used it rather improperly.

He shook the sacred honour of his head,
With terror trembled heav'n's subsidary hail,
And from his shaken curls ambrosial dews distill. Dryden.

Now Jove suspends his golden scales in air,
Weights the men's wits against the lady's hair:
The doubtful beam long nods from side to side;
At length the wits mount up, the hairs subside. Pope.

SUBSIDENCE. n. f. [from subsido.] The

SUBSIDENCY. n. f. act of sinking; tendency downward.

This gradual subsidence of the abyss would take up a considerable time. Burnet's Theory.

This miscellany of bodies being determined to subside merely by their different specific gravities, all those which had the same gravity subsided at the same time. Woodward.

By the alternate motion of those air bubbles, whose surfaces are by turns freed from mutual contact, and by a sudden subside meet again by the ingress and egress of the air, the liquor is still farther attenuated. Arbutnot on Aliments.

SUBSIDIARY. adj. [subsidiare, Fr. subsidiarius, Lat. from subsidy.] Assistant; brought in aid.

Bitter substances burn the blood, and are a sort of subsidiary gall. Arbutnot on Aliments.

SUBSIDY. n. s. [subsida, Fr. subsidium, Lat.] Aid, commonly such as is given in money.

They advised the king to send speedy aids, and with much alacrity granted a great rate of subsidy. Bacon.

'Tis all the subsidy the present age can raise. Dryden.

It is a celebrated notion of a patriot, that a house of commons should never grant such subsidies as give no pain to the people, lest the nation should acquire under a burden they did not feel. Addison.

TO SUBSIGN. v. a. [subsigno, Lat.] To sign under.

Neither have they seen any deed, before the conquest, but subsigned with crosses and single names without surnames. Camden.

TO SUBSIST. v. n. [subsistit, Fr. subsisto, Lat.]

1. To be; to have existence.

2. To continue; to retain the present state or condition.

Firm we subsist, but possible to swerve. Milton.
The very foundation was removed, and it was a moral impossibility that the republic could subsist any longer. Savigny.

3. To have means of living; to be maintained.

He shone so powerfully upon me, that, like the heat of a Russian summer, he ripened the fruits of poetry in a cold climate; and gave me what was vital to subsist in the long winter which succeeded. Dryden.

Let us remember those that want necessities, as we ourselves should have desired to be remembered, had it been our sad lot to subsist on other men's charity. Atterbury.

4. To inhere; to have existence by means of something else.

Though the general natures of these qualities are sufficiently distant from one another, yet when they come to subsist in particulars, and to be clothed with several accidents, then the discernment is not so easy. South.

SUBSISTENCE or SUBSISTENCY. n. s. [subsistence, Fr. from subsist.]

1. Real being.

The flesh, and the conjunction of the flesh with God, began both at one instant; his making and taking to himself our flesh was but one act, in that in Christ there is no personal subsistence but one, and that from everlasting. Hobbes.

We know as little how the union is dissolved, that is, the chain of these differing subsistencies that compound us, as how it first commenced. Glasse.

Not only the things had subsistence, but the very images were of some creatures existing. Stillingfleet.

2. Competence; means of supporting life.

His viceroy could only propose to himself a comfortable subsistence out of the plunder of his province. Addison.

3. Inherence in something else.

SUBSISTENT. adj. [subsistens, Lat.]

1. Having real being.

Such as deny spirits subsistent without bodies, will with difficulty affirm the separate existence of their own. Brown.

2. Inherent.

These qualities are not subsistent in those bodies, but are operations of fancy begotten in something else. Bentley.

SUBSTANCE. n. s. [substantia, Fr. substantia, Lat.]

1. Being; something existing; something of which we can say that it is.

Since then the soul works by herself alone, Springs not from sense, nor humours, well agreed, Her nature is peculiar, and her own; She is a substance, and a perfect being. Davies.

The strength of gods, And this empirical substance, cannot fail. Milton.

2. That which supports accidents.

What creatures there inhabit, of what mold And substance? Milton.
Every being is considered as subsisting in and by itself, and then it is called a substance; or it subsists in and by another, and then it is called a mode or manner of being. Watts.

3. The essential part.

It will serve our turn to comprehend the substance, without confining ourselves to scrupulous exactness in form. Digby.

This edition is the same in substance with the Latin. Burn.

They are the best epitomes, and let you see with one cast of the eye the substance of a hundred pages. Addison.

4. Something real, not imaginary; something solid, not empty.

Shadows to-night Have struck more terror to the soul of Richard, Than can the substance of ten thousand soldiers Arm'd all in proof, and led by shallow Richmond. Shakespeare.

He the future evil shall no less In apprehension than in substance feel. Milton.

Hercules virtue did his actions guide, And he the substance, not the appearance, chose; To refuse one such friend he took more pride, Than to destroy whole thousands of such foes. Dryden.

God is no longer to be worshipped and believed in as a god refreshing and assuring by types, but as a god who has performed the substance of what he promised. Newton.

5. Body; corporeal nature.

Between the parts of opaque and coloured bodies are many spaces, either empty or replenished with mediums of other densities; as, water between the tingling corpuscles; wherewith any liquor is impregnated, air between the aqueous globules that constitute clouds or mists, and for the most part spaces void of both air and water, but yet perhaps not wholly void of all substance between the parts of hard bodies. Newton.

The qualities of plants are more various than those of animal substances. Arbutnot on Aliments.

There may be a great and constant cough, with an extraordinary discharge of stagnated matter, while, notwithstanding, the substance of the lungs remains sound. Blackmore.

6. Wealth; means of life.

He hath eaten me out of house and home, and hath put all my substance into that fat belly of his, but I will have some of it out again. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

We are destroying many thousand lives, and exhausting our substances, but not for our own interest. Swift.

SUBSTANTIAL. adj. [substantial, Fr. from substantia.]

1. Real; actually existing.

If this atheist would have his chance take a real and substantial agent, he is more stupid than the vulgar. Bentley.

2. True; solid; real; not merely seeming.

O blessed, blessed night! I am afraid, Being in night, all this is but a dream; Too flattering sweet to be substantial. Shakespeare.

To give thee being, I lent Out of my side to thee, nearest my heart, Substantial life. Milton.

It happens to be a substantial good, Not from a sort of accidents, nor subject to them, I could to seek it in a blind revenge. Darwin.

Time, as a river, hath brought down to us what is more light and superficial, while things more solid and substantial have been immersed. Glasse.

The difference between the empty vanity of ostentation, and the substantial ornaments of virtue. L'Estrange.

Observations are the only sure ground, wherewith to build a lasting and substantial philosophy. Woodward.

A full and substantial greatness of soul, looks down with respect on the censures and applause of the multitude. Addison.

This useful, charitable, humble employment of yourselves, is what I recommend to you with great earnestness, as being a substantial part of a wife and pious life. Law.

3. Corporeal; material.

Now these three planets with substantial rays? Does innate lustre give them natural day? Perr.

The sun appears but like a plate of silver, the moon as big as the sun, and the rainbow a large substantial arch in the sky; all which are geocentric notions. Watts.

4. Strong; stout; bulky.

TO SUCCEED. v. n. [succeder, Fr. succedo, Lat.]

1. To follow in order.

If I will now to die,
'Twere to be most happy; for I fear
My soul hath but content to absolute,
That not another comfort like to this Succeeds in unknown fate. Shakespeare's Othello.
Thole of all ages to succeed will curse my head.
Astion.

2. To come into the place of one who has quitted or died.

Workmen let it cool by degrees in such relents
Of cooling heats, lest it should shiver in pieces
By a violent succeeding of air in the room of the fire.
Dryden on Horace.

Enjoy till I return
Short pleasures; for long woes are to succeed. Milton.
It the father left only daughters, they equally Succeeded to him in copartnership, without prela-tion or preference of the eldest to a double portion.
Malta.

Revenge succeeds to love, and rage to grief. Dryden.
While the sun limbs the vital spirit ferds,
While day to night, and night to day succeeds,
Burnt all rings mourn and evening shall he shine,
And fires eternal in thy temple shine. Dryden.

These dull harmless makers of languors are yet
Of dangerous example to the publick. Some witty men may succeed to their designs, and, mixing fence with malice, blast the reputation of the most innocent. Dryden.

The pretensions of Saul's family, who received his crown from the immediate appointment of God, ended with his reign; and David by the same title, succeeded in his throne to the exclusion of Jonathan. Locke.

3. To obtain one's wish; to terminate an undertaking in the desired effect.

'Tis almost impossible for poets to succeed without ambition: imagination must be raised by a desire of fame to a desire of pleasing. Dryden.

This address I have long thought owing; and if I had never attempted, I might have been vain enough to think I might have succeeded. Dryden.

A knave's a knave to me in every state;
Alike my scorn, if he succeed or fail;
Sporus at court, or Japnet in a jail. Pope.

4. To terminate according to wish; to have a good effect.

If thou deal truly, thy doings shall prosperously succeed to thee. Tob. iv. 6.

This was impossible for Virgil to imitate, because of the severity of the Roman language:
Sperius endeavoured it in Shepherd's Kalendar;
but neither will it succeed in English. Dryden.

5. To go under cover.

Please that hivan scene to take,
Where whistling winds uncertain shadows make;
Or will you to the cooler cave succeed,
Whole mouth the curling vines have overspread?
Dryden.

TO SUCCEED. v. n.

1. To follow; to be subsequent or consequent to.

son following another.

St. Augustine, having reckoned up a great number of the bishops of Rome, sixth, in all this order of succession of bishops there is not one found a Donatus. Hooker.

Reflection on appearances of several ideas, one after another, in our minds, furnishes us with the idea of succession. Locke.

Let a cannon-bullet pass through a room, and take with it any flamb of a man, it is clear that it must strike successively, the two sides of the room, touch one part of the flesh first, and another after,
and so in succession. Locke.

2. A series of things or persons following one another.

These delays in Spain have been occasioned by so long a war with Holland; but most by two successions of inactive princes. Daniel.

The smallest particles of matter may cohere by the strongest attractions, and compose bigger particles of weaker virtue; and many of these may cohere and compose bigger particles, whose virtue is still weaker; and so on for divers successions, until the progression end in the biggest particles, in which the operations in chymistry and the colours of natural bodies depend. Newton's Opticks.

3. A lineage; an order of descendants.

Cadibalan,
And his succession, granted Rome a tribute.
Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

A long succession must ensue;
And his next lot the clouded ark of God
Shall in a glorious temple ensue. Milton's Par. L.

4. The power or right of coming to the inheritance of ancestors.

What people is so void of common sense,
To vote succession from a native prince? Dryden.

or consecution uninterrupted.

Three wifely courage he attains,
And each successive after other quails,
Still wondering whence so many kings should rise.
Daniel.

God hath set
Labour and rest, as day and night, to men Successive. Milton's Paradise Lost.

God, by reason of his eternal indivisible nature, is by one single act of duration present to all the successive portions of time, and all successively existing in them. South.

Send the successive ills through ages down,
And let each weeping father tell his son. Trar.

2. Inherited by succession. Not in use.

Countrymen,
Plead my successive title with your swords. Shaks.
The empire being elective, and not successive, the emperors, in being, made profit of their own time.
Rak.

SUCCESSIVELY. adv. [successive, Fr. from successive.] In uninterrupted order; one after another.

Three sons he left,
All which successively by turns did reign. Fairy Qu.
Is it upon record? or else reported Successively from age to age? Shaks. Richard III.
That king left only by his six wives three children, who reigned successively, and died childless.
Bacon.

We that measure times by first and last,
The light of things successively do take,
When God on all at once his view doth cast,
And of all times doth but one instant make. Daniel.

I inclined the paper to the rays very obliquely, that the most refrangible rays might be more copiously reflected than the rest, and the whiteness at length changed successively into blue, indigo, and violet. Newton's Opticks.

No such motion of the same atom can be all of it existent at once: it must needs be made gradually and successively, both as to place and time; seeing that body cannot at the same instant be in more places than one. Bentley's Sermons.

We have a tradition coming down to us from our fathers; a kind of inheritance successively conveyed to us by the primitive saints from the apostles themselves. Waterland.

SUCCESSIVENESS. n. s. [from successive.]

One of the greatest in the Christian world
Shall be my surety. Shakspere.

I will be surety for him; of my hand shalt thou require him. Genesis, xlii. 9.

Yet he not surety, if thou be a father;
Love is a personal debt: I cannot give

My children's right, nor ought he take it. Herbert.

All, in infancy, are by others presented with the duties of the parents, and intercession of sureties, that they may be early admitted by baptism into the school of Christ. Hemmond.

SURFACE.

SURFACE, n. f. [from sur and face, French.] Superficies; outside; superfluous. It is accented by Milton on the last syllable.

Which of us who beholds the bright surface
Of this ethereal mold, whereon we stand. Milt.
Error, like it rains upon the surface flow;
He who would search for pearls must dive below.

Dryden.
All their surfaces shall be truly plain, or truly spherical, and look all the same way, so as together to compose one even surface. Newton's Opticks.

TO SURFEIT, v. a. [from sur and saire, French, to do more than enough, to overdo.] To feed with meat or drink to satiety and sickness; to cram overmuch.

The surfeited groans
Do mock their charge with noises. Shakespeare.
TO SURFEIT, v. n. To be fed to satiety and sickness.

They are a sick that surfeit with too much, as they that starve with nothing. Shak. Merch. of Ven.
Take heed lest your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness. Luke, xxi. 34.
Though some had so surfeited in the vineyards,
and with the wines, that they had been left behind,
the generosity of the Spaniards sent them all home.

Clarendon.
They must be let loose to the childish play they fancy, which they should be weaned from, by being made to surfeit of it. Locke.

SURFEIT, n. f. [from the verb.] Sickness or satiety caused by overfulness.

When we are sick in fortune, often the surfeits of our own behaviour, we make guilty of our disasters the sun, the moon and stars. Shak. R. Lear.
How ill white hairs become a fool and jester!
I have long dream'd of such a kind of man,
So surfeit swell'd, so old, and so profane.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Now comes the sick hour that has surfeit made,
Now shall he try his friends that flatter'd him.

Shakespeare's Richard II.
Why, disease, dost thou molest
Ladies, and of them the best?
Do not men grow sick of rites,
To thy altars, by their nights Spent in surfeits? Ben Jonson.

Surfeits many times turn to purges, both up ward, and downwards. Bacon's Natural History.
Peace, which he lov'd in life, did lend
Her hand to bring him to his end;
When age and death call'd for the score,
No surfeits were to reckon for. Crashaw.
Our father
Has ta'en himself a surfeit of the world,
And cries, it is not late that we should taste it.

SURFEITER, n. f. [from surfeit.] One who riots; a glutton.

I did not think
This am'rous surfeiter would have donn'd his helm
For such a petty war. Shakesp. Art. and Cleopat.

SURFEITWATER, n. f. [from surfeit and water.] Water that cures surfeits.

A little cold-distilled poppywater, which is the true surfeitwater, with rest and abstinence, often ends distempers in the beginning. Locke.

SURGE, n. f. [from surgo, Latin.] A swelling sea; wave rolling above the general surface of the water; billow; wave.

The realm was left, like a ship in a storm, amidst all the raging surges, unruled and undirected of any. Spenser.

The wind-shak'd surge, with high and main furious main,

Seems to cast water on the burning bear,
And quench the guards of the ever-fixed pole;
Never did like molestation view
The enchained flood. Shakespeare.

He trod the waters,
And smir'd the guards of the ever-fixed pole;
Never did like molestation view
The enchained flood. Shakespeare.

It was formerly famous for the unfortunate loves of Hero and Leander, drowned in the uncom-passionate surges. Sandys

The sulph'rous hail Shot after us in storm, o'erblown, hath laid
The fiery surge, that from the precipice
Of heav'n receiv'd us falling. Milton's Par. Lost.

He sweeps the skies, and clears the cloudy north;
He flies aloft, and with impetuous roar
Pursues the foaming surge, to the shore. Dryden.

'Tis this, near Ismena's swelling flood,
With dread beheld the rolling surges sweep
In heaps his slaughter'd sons into the deep. Pope.

TO SURGE, v. n. [from surgo, Latin.] To swell; to rise high.

From midst of all the main
The surging waters like a mountain rise. Spenser.
He, all in rage, his sea god fire besought,
Some curst vengeance on his son to cast;
From surging gulfs two monstrous monsters were brought. Spenser.

The serpent mov'd, not with indented wave,
Prone on the ground, as since; but on his rear,
Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd Fold above fold, a surging maze. Milt. Par. Lost.

Surging waves against a solid rock,
Though all to shivers dash'd, th' assault renew,
Vain battery, and in froth or bubbles end. Milton.

SURGEON, n. f. [corrupted by conversation from chirurgion.] One who cures by manual operation; one whose duty is to act in external maladies by the direction of the physician.

The wound was past the cure of a better surgeon than myself, so as I could but receive some few of his dying words. Sidney.

I meddle with no woman's matters; but wistful,
I am a surgeon to old shoes. Shakesp. Julius Caesar.
He that hath wounded his neighbour, is tied to the expences of the surgeon, and other incidences.

Taylor.
That most were sorely wounded, none were slain:
The surgeons soon dispos'd them of their arms,
And some with salves they cure. Dryden.

SURGEONRY, n. f. [for chirurgery.] The SURGERY, n. f. act of curing by manual operation.

It would seem very evil surgery to cut off every unfound part of the body, which, being by other due means recovered, might afterwards do good service. Spenser.

Strangely visited people,
The mere despair of surgery, he cures. Shak. Macb.

They are often tarred over with the surgery of our sheep, and would you have us kiss it? Shakesp.

SURGY, adj. [from surge.] Rising in bil-lows.

Do public or domestick cares constrain
This toilsome voyage o'er the surgy main? Pope.

That take it on you at the first so roundly. Shak.
In it surly spirit, melancholy,
Had bak'd thy blood, and made it heavy thick,
Which else runs tickling up and down the veins,
Making that idiot laughter keep men's eyes,
And drain their cheeks to idle merriment.

Shakespeare's King John.

Against the capital I met a lion,
Who glar'd upon me, and went surly by,
Without annoying me. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
Repul'd by surly grooms, who wait before
The sleeping tyrant's interdicted door. Dryden.

suspect; to imagine imperfectly; to imagine without certain knowledge.

Man coveteth what exceedeth the reach of sense, yea somewhat above capacity of reason, somewhat divine and heavenly, which with hidden exultation it rather surmiseth than conceiveth: somewhat it seeketh, and what that is directly it knoweth not, yet very intemperate desire thereof doth so in it, that all other known delights and pleasures are laid aside, and they give place to the search of this but only suspected desire. Hooker.

Of questions and intricacies of words cometh envy, railings, and evil surmisings. 1 Tim. vi. 4.

very learned man, but by dissolving it. Woodw.

SURMISE, n. f. [from surmise, French.] Imperfect notion; suspicion; imagination not supported by knowledge.

To let go private surmises, whereby the thing itself is not made better or worse, it just and allowable reasons might lead them to do as they did,
then all these censures frustrate. Hooker.

They were by law of that proud tyranness,
Provok'd with wrath, and envy's false surmise,
Condemn'd to that dungeon merciless,
Where they should live in woe, and die in wretchedness. Spenser.

My compassionate heart
Will not permit my eyes once to behold
The thing, whereat it trembles by surmise. Shak.
My thought, whose murdering yet is but fantastical,

Shakes to my single state of man, that function
Is smother'd in surmise. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
No sooner did they espy the English turning from them, but they were of opinion that they fled towards their shipping: this surmise was occasioned, for that the English ships removed the day before.

rally used of binding newborn children.

Involved by a veil of clouds,

And swaddled as new born in tulle shrouds;

For that's a receptacle I design'd.

How soon doth man decay!

When cloths are taken from a chest of sweets,

To swaddle infants, whole young breath

Scarcely knows the way,

Those cloths are little winding sheets,

Which do consign and send them unto death.

They swaddled me up in my night-gown with long pieces of linen, till they had wrapt me in about a hundred yards of swathe.

2. To beat; to cudgel. A low ludicrous word.

Great on the bench, great in the saddle,

That could as well bind o'er as swaddle.

SWADDLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Cleathy, bound round the body.

I begged them to unbind me: no, no, say they,
and upon that carried me to one of their rooms, pressed, he hath a long fin upon his back, and inorder answering to it on his belly; by which he is the better kept upright, or from swagging on his sides.

TO SWAGE. v. a. [from affuage.] To ease; to soften; to mitigate.

Not words have power to swage

The tumours of a troubled mind,

And as a balm to tender'd wounds.

Nor wanting power to mitigate and swage,
With solemn touches, troubled thoughts, and safe
Anguish, and doubt, and fear from mortal minds.

I will love thee:

Though my distracted senses should forsake me,
I'd find some intervals, when my poor heart
Should swage itself, and be let loose to thine.

TO SWAGGER. v. n. [swaggeren, Dut. to make a noise; Dutch, Saxon.] To bluster; to bully; to be turbulently and tumultuously proud and insolent.

'Drunken squabble' swagger and discourse sustained with one's own shadow? Oh thou invincible spirit of wine!

'Tis the rage of one that I should fight withal, if he be alive; a rascal that swaggered with me last night.

The lesser fire of mortals love to swagger for opinions, and to boast infallibility of knowledge.

Many such asses in the world huff, look big, stare, drest, cock, and swagger at the time noisy rate.

He chuck'd,

And scarcely design'd to set a foot to ground,

But swagger'd like a lord.

Confidence,

- Confidence, how weakly fostered; hath some effect upon the ignorant, who think there is something more than ordinary in a swaggering man, that talks of nothing but demonstration.

SWAN. n. f. [Irish, Saxon; swan, Danish; swan, Dutch; cygnus, Latin.]

The swan is a large water-fowl, that has a long neck, and is very white, excepting when it is young. Its legs and feet are black, as is its bill, which is like that of a goose, but something rounder, and a little hooked at the lower end of it: the two sides below its eyes are black and shining like ebony. Swans use wings like sails, which catch the wind, so that they are driven along in the waves. They feed upon herbs and some sort of grain like a goose, and some are said to have lived three hundred years. There is a species of swans with the feathers of their heads, towards the breast, marked at the ends with a gold colour inclining to red. The swan is reckoned by Moses among the unclean creatures; but it was consecrated to Apollo the god of music, because it was said to sing melodiously when it was near expiring; a tradition generally received, but fabulous.

Cassius.

With untainted eye

Compare her face with some that I shall show, And I will make thee think thy swan a crow.

Let me look found, when he doth make his choice; Then it is his life, he makes a swan-like end.

The fearful motions raise a screaming cry, Old feeble men with wailing groans reply, A jarring found resound, and mingles in the sky, Like that of swans returning to the flood.

Dryden.

The idea which an Englishman signifies by the name swan, is a white colour, long neck, black beak, black legs, and white feet, and all these of a certain size, with a power of swimming in the water, and making a certain kind of noise.

Swarm'd on rotten sticks the bees I found. Gay. When bees hang in swarming throngs, they will presently rise, if the weather hold.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. To appear in multitudes; to crowd; to throng.

The merciless, Macdorel,
The multiplying villanies of nature
Do swarm upon. Shakspeare's Macbeth
Our superfluous language, and our passions,
Wha in unnecessary action swarm
About our ignorance of fate. Shakspeare's Henry V.
What a multitude of thoughts to once Awaken'd in my heart, what I could
What from within I feel, and what I hear
What from without comes, what to say, and what to do.
Then in the throat, high plac'd before the
In crowded scenes the swarming people lie.

3 To be crowded; to be over-run; to be thronged

Thick gardens you have now planted through out all England, and every place swarms with children.
Her lower regions swarm with all sort of foul,
her rivers with fish, and our seas with whole shoals.

These days, swarmed with tallies, and from such ground took hints for fiction, painting the world every where.

Late swarms with this, the oldest of the art,
Where there is safety for a tender mind? Young

4 To breed multitudes.

Not to thick swarm'd once the soil
Bedropp'd with blood or to gon. Milton's Paradise Lost

5 It is used in conversation for climbing a tree, by embracing it with the arms and legs.

My heart was torn in pieces to see the husband suffering and keeping down the swellings of his grief.

Tatler.

To SWELL. v. n. To break out in sweat, if that be the meaning.

Cheerful blood in faintness chill did melt,
Which, like a fever fit, through all his body swell'd.

To SWEALTER. v. n. [This is supposed

When a circle 'bout the wrist
Is made by beadle exorcist,
The body feels the spur and switch. Hudibras.
Mauritania, on the fifth medal, leads a horse with something like a thread; in her other hand she holds a switch. Addison.

To SWITCH. v. a. [from the noun.] To lash; to jerk.

Let thy bridle's weight
Most of thy left side; thy right horse then switching, all thy throat
Spent in encouragements give him; and all the rein let float. Chapman's Iliad.

SWITCH. n. s. Something fixed in another body to as to turn round in it.

SWOBBER. n. s. [See SWABBER.]

cidentally used in betting at the game of whist.

The clergyman used to play at whist and swoobbers playing now and then a sober game at whist for pastime, it might be pardoned; but he could not digest those wicked swoobers. Swift.

SWO'LEN. } The participle passive of SWO'LN. } swell.

Unto his aid she bristled did draw
Her dreadful beard, who, swollen with blood of late,
Came stamping forth with proud presumptuous gait. Spenser.

When thus the gather'd storms of wretched love
In my swollen bosom with long war had strove,
At length they broke their bounds: at length their force

Bore down whatever met its stronger course;
Laid all the civil bonds of manhood waste,
And scatter'd ruin as the torrent past. Prior.

Whereas at first we had only three of these principles, their number is already swollen to five.

Baker in Learning.

SWO'LN. The preterite of swell.

To SWOON. v. n. [arunnan, Saxon.] To suffer a suspension of thought and sensation; to faint.

So play the foolish throngs with one that swoons;
Come all to help him, and to stop the air
By which he should revive. Shakespeare.

It thou stand'st not in the state of hanging, or of some death more long in specterishness, and cruelty in suffering, behold now presently, and swoon for what's to come upon thee. Shakespeare.

We see the great and sudden effect of knells in singing men again, when they swoon. Maron.
The most in years swoon'd first away for pain;
Then, scarce recover'd, spoke. Dryden.

The woman find it all a trick,
That he could swoon when the way sick;
And knows that in that grief he reckon'd
On black-eyed Susan for his second. Prior.

There appeared such an ecstasy in his action, that he seemed ready to swoon away in the surprise of joy. Tortier.

upon his prey.

A swallow bird, called a hawk, the swallow there of which wings are twelve pairs, can with as much ease swoop up an elephant as our kites do a sparrow. Hutton.

He would ring pieces in your hands did fall, and now at last you came to swoop it all. Dryden.

To prey upon; to catch up.

He plucked books with another eye on the denial herb than the grassing or, which swoops in with the common grake. Glanville's Sieges.

3. To pass with violence. Not used.
The nine-ston'd trophy thus whilst the doth entertain,

Proud Tamer swoops along with such a lofty train,
As fits so brave a flood. Drayton.

Swoor. n. s. [from the verb.] Fall of a bird of prey upon his quarry.

All my pretty ones?
Did you say all? What all? O hellkite! all?
What, all my pretty chickens and their dam,
At one fell swoop? Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The eagle fell into the fox's quarters, and carried away a whole litter of cubs at a swoop. L'Estrange.

To SWOP. v. a. [Of uncertain derivation.]
To change; to exchange one thing for another. A low word.

When I drove a thrust home, he put it by,
And cried, as in derision, Spare the striking;
Oh that insulting word! I would have swoop'd
Youth for old age, and all my life behind,
To have been then a momentary man. Dryden's Cleomenes.

SWORD. n. s. [sweord, Saxon; swert,
Dutch.]

1. A weapon used either in cutting or thrusting; the usual weapon of fights hand to hand.

Old unhappy traitor, the sword is out
That must destroy thee. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Each man took his sword, and slew all the males. Genesis.

But the sword
Of Michael from the armoury of God
Was given him temper'd so, that neither keen Nor solid might resist that edge: it met
The sword of Satan with steep force to smite
Defending, and in half cut sheer; nor stay'd,
But with swift wheel reverse, denouncing fear'd
All his right side: then Satan felt knew pain,
And with'd him to and fro convolv'd; so fore
The guiding sword with discontinuous wound Pass'd through him. Milton.

2. Destruction by war; as fire and sword.
The sword without, and terror within. Dent. xxxii. 25.

3. Vengeance of justice.

Justice to merit does weak aid afford,
She quits the heinous, and designs the sword. Dryden.

Against a sworder. Shakespeare.

SWO'RD. n. s. [xigbiar.] A fish with a long sharp bone issuing from his head.

A swordfish small him from the rest did fander,
There in his throat him pricking softly under,
His side abyss him forced forth to spew. Spenser.
Malpighi observed the middle of the optick nerve of the swordfish to be a large membrane, folded, according to its length, in many doubles, like a fan.
Darwin's Physico-Theology.

Our little fleet was now engag'd so far,
That like the swordfish in the whale they fought;
The combat only seem'd a civil war,
Till through their bowels we our passage wrought. Dryden.

SWO'RD. n. s. [gladiolus.] A kind of sedge; gladder. Ainsworth.

SWO'RD. n. s. [sword and knot.]

What feign'd submission swore. Milton.

SWORN. The participle passive of swear.

What does else want credit, come to me,
And I'll be sworn 'tis true. Shakespeare.

I am sworn brother, sweet,
To grim Necessity; and he and I Will keep a league till death. Shakespeare's Richard II.
They that are mad against me, are sworn against me. Psalms.

He refused not the civil offer of a Pharisee, though his sworn enemy; and would eat at the table of those who fought his ruin. Calamy's Sermons.

To shelter innocence,
The nation all elects some patron-knight,
Sworn to be true to love, and slave to fame,
And many a valiant chief enrolls his name. Grannville.

SWUM. Preterite and participle passive of swim.

Her hand within her hair she wound,
Swung her to earth, and dragg'd her on the ground. Addison.

SYB. adj. [properly sib, rib, Saxon.] Related by blood. The Scottish dialect still retains it.

If what my grandfire to me said, be true,
Siker I am very syb to you. Spenser's Pastoral.

SYCAMINE. n. s. A tree. The sycamore SYCAMORE. } of Scripture is not the same with ours.

Sycamore is our acer majus, one of the kinds of maples: it is a quick grower. Mortimer's Husb.
If ye had faith as a grain of mustard-seed, ye might say unto this sycamine-tree, Be thou plucked up, and it should obey you. Luke, xvii. 6.

I was no prophet, but an herdman, and a gatherer of sycamore fruit. Amos, vii. 14.

Go to yonder sycamore-tree, and hide your bottle of drink under its hollow root. Walton's Angler.

Sycamores with eglantine were spread;
A hedge about the sides, a covering over head. Dryden.

SYCOPHANT. n. s. [συκοφαντης; sycphanta, Lat.] A talebearer; a makebate; a malicious parasite.

Accusing sycophants, of all men, did best sort to his nature; but therefore not seeming sycophants, because of the way they said, they could bring any new or doubtful thing unto him, but such as already he had been apt to determine; so as they came but as proofs of his wisdom, fear, and more secure, while the fear he had figured in his mind had any possibility of event.

Men know themselves void of those qualities which the impudent scophant, at the same time, both ascribes to them, and in his sleeve laughs at them for believing.

TO SYCOPHANT. v. n. [συκοφαντω; from the noun.] To play the sycophant. A low bad word.

His sycophanting arts being detected, that game is not to be played the second time; whereas a man of clear reputation, though his barque be split, has something left towards setting up again.

Government of the Tongue.

SYCOPHANTICK. adj. [from sycophant.] Talebearing; mischievously officious.

TO SYCOPHANTISE. v. n. [συκοφαντις; from sycophant.] To play the talebearer.

SYLLABICK. adj. [syllabique, Fr. from syllable.] Relating to syllables.

SYLLABLE. n. f. [σλλαβη; syllabe, Fr.]

1. As much of a word as is uttered by the help of one vowel, or one articulation.

I heard

Each syllable that breath made up between them.

Shakespeare.

There is that property in all letters, of aptness to be conjoined in syllables and words, through the voluble motions of the organs from one stop or figure to another, that they modify and discriminate the voice without appearing to discontinue it.

Milner's Elem. of Speech.

2. Any thing proverbially concise.

Abraham, Job, and the rest that lived before any syllable of the law of God was written, did they not sin as much as we do in every action not commanded?

Hosker.

To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow, Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,

To the last syllable of recondite time;

And all our yesterdays have lighted fools

The way to dusty death.

He hath blunted the edge of many fables, with out one syllable of truth, that he hath blunted the edge of my tongue.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Devis.

TO SYLLABLE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To utter; to pronounce; to articulate. Not in use.

Airy tongues that syllable men's names On sands and shores, and desert wildernesses.

Mil.

SYLLABUS. n. f. [rightly SILLABUS, which see.] Milk and acids.

No syllabus made at the milking pail,

But what are compos'd of a pot of good ale.

Two lines would express all they say in two pages: 'tis nothing but whipt syllabus and froth, without solidity.

Beaum.

Felton.

SYLLABUS. n. f. [συλλαβος.] An abstract; a compendium containing the heads of a discourse.

SYLLOGISM. n. f. [συλλογισμος; syllogisme, Fr.] An argument composed of three propositions: as, every man thinks; Peter is a man, therefore Peter thinks.

A piece of the duck is a sufficient argument of logic, an apologue of AEsop beyond a syllabus in Barbara.

Brown.

What a miraculous thing should we count it, if the Flint and the steel, instead of a few sparks, should chance to knock out definitions and syllogisms!

Bentley.

SYLLOGISTICAL. adj. [συλλογιστικος.]

SYLLOGISTICK. adj. [from syllogism.] Retaining to a syllogism; consisting of a syllogism.

Though we suppose subject and predicate, and copula, and propositions and syllogistical connections in their reasoning, there is no such matter; but the intricate business is at the same moment present with them, without deducing one thing from another.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Though the terms of propositions may be complex, yet where the composition of the whole argument is thus plain, simple, and regular, it is properly called a simple syllogism, since the complex does not belong to the syllogistical form of it.

Watts's Logick.

SYLLOGISTICALLY. adv. [from syllogistical.] In the form of a syllogism.

A man knows first, and then he is able to prove syllogistically; so that syllogism comes after knowledge, when a man has no need of it.

Locke.

TO SYLLOGIZE. v. n. [συλλογισεν, Fr. συλλογισεν.] To reason by syllogism.

Logic is, in effect, an art of syllogizing.

Men have endeavoured to transmute logic into a kind of mechanism, and to teach boys to syllogize, or frame arguments and refute them, without real knowledge.

Watts.

SYLVAN. adj. [better silvan] Woody; shady; relating to woods.

Cedar and pine, and fir and branching palm,

A silvan scene I and, as the ranks descend,

Shade above shade, a woody theatre

Of stateliest view.

Eternal greens the mossy margin grace,

Watch'd by the silvan genius of the place.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

SYLVAN. n. f. [silvain, Fr.] A wood-god, or satyr; perhaps sometimes a rustic.

Her private orchards, wall'd on every side,

To lowly silvans all access deny'd.

Pope.

SYMBOL. n. f. [symbole, Fr. συμβολον; symbolum, Lat.]

1. An abstract; a compendium; a comprehensive form.

Beginning with the symbol of our faith upon that the author of the gloss enquires into the nature of faith.

Baker.

2. A type; that which comprehends in its figure a representation of something else.

Salt, as incorruptible, was the symbol of friendship, which, if it casually fell, was accounted ominous, and their amity of no duration.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Words are the signs and symbols of things; and as, in accounts, cyphers and figures pass for real sums, so words and names pass for things themselves.

South's Sermons.

The heathens made choice of these lights as apt symbols of sterility, because, contrary to all sublimity beings, though they seem to perish every night, they renew themselves every morning.

Addison on Medals.

SYMBOLICAL. adj. [symbolique, Fr. συμβολικος; from symbol.] Representative; typical; expressing by signs; comprehending something more than itself.

By this encroachment idolatry first crept in, men converting the symbolical use of idols into their proper worship, and receiving the representation of things into them as the substance and thing itself.

Brown.

The sacrament is a representation of Christ's death, by such symbolical actions as himself appointed.

Taylor.

SYMBOLICALLY. adv. [from symbolical.] Typically; by representation.

This distinction of animals was symbolical, in the inward sense implying an assemblance from certain vices, symbolically indicated from the nature of those animals.

Brown.

It symbolically teaches our duty, and promotes charity by a real signature and a sensible form.

Taylor.

SYMBOLIZATION. n. f. [from symbolize.] The act of symbolizing; representation; resemblance.

The hieroglyphical symbols of Scripture, excellently intended in the species of things sacrificed in the dreams of Pharaoh, are oftentimes ranked beyond their symbolizations. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO SYMBOLIZE. v. n. [symboliser, Fr. from symbol.] To have something in common with another by representative qualities.

Our king finding himself to symbolize in many things with that king of the Hebrews, haroured him with the title of the foundation.

Bacon.

The pleasing of colour symbolizes with the pleasing of any single tone to the ear; but the pleasing of colour both symbolizes with harmony.

Bacon's Natural History.

Aristotle and the school have taught, that air and water, being symbolizing elements, in the quality of moisture, are easily transmutable into one another.

Ely.

They both symbolize in this, that they have to look upon themselves through multiplying glasses.

Macleod.

I affectedly symbolized in a castle with you, freedom with the libertines, to circumvent liberation.

Macleod.

The soul is such, that it strangely symbolizes with the thing it might be desired.

Scott's Sermons.

TO SYMBOLIZE. v. a. To make representative of something.

Some symbolize the same from the mystery of its colours.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SYMMETRIAN. n. f. [from symmetry.] One eminently studious of proportion.

His face was a thought longer than the exact symmetrians would allow.

Sturdy.

SYMMETRICAL. adj. [from symmetry.] Proportionate; having parts well adapted to each other.

SYMMETRIST. n. f. [from symmetry.] One very studious or observant of proportion.

Some exact symmetrists have been blamed for being so true.

Watson's Architecture.

SYMMETRY. n. f. [symmetric, Fr. symmetrie; and μετρον.] Adaptation of parts to each other; proportion; harmony; agreement of one part to another.

Shew whose face proportion should be Examined measure of all symmetry;

Whom had that ancient seer, who thought souls made;

Of harmony, he would at next have said

That harmony was she.

And in the symmetry of her parts is found

A power, like that of harmony in sound.

Water.

Symmetry, equality, and correspondence of parts, is the discernment of reason, not the object of sense.

Locke.

Nor were they only animated by him, but their measure and symmetry were owing to him.

Brady.

SYMPATHETICAL. adj. [sympathetique, Fr. from sympathy.]

Having mutual sensation; being affected either by what happens to the other, feeling in consequence of what another feels.

Hereupon are grounded the gross mistakes in the art of diseases, not only from sympathetic receipts, but amulets, charms, and all incantatory applications.

Brown.

United by this sympathetic bond, You grow familiar, intimate, and fond.

Johnson.

To confer at the distance of the Indies by sympathy.

Johnson.

patetick conveyance, may be as usual to future times as to us in a literary correspondence.

Glanville's Scuffs.

To you our author makes her soft request,
Who speak the kindest, and who write the best
Your sympatetick heart to the hopes to move,
From tender friendship and endearing love. Prior.
All the ideas of sensible qualities are not inherent in the inanimate bodies; but are the effects of their motion upon our nerves, and sympatetick and vital passions produced within ourselves.

Bentley.

SYMPATHETICALLY. adv. [from sympatetick.] With sympathy; in consequence of sympathy.

To SYMPATHIZE. v. n. [sympatizer, Fr. from sympathy.]

1. To feel with another; to feel in consequence of what another feels; to feel mutually.

The man sympathizes with the mastiff in robustious and rough coming on. Shakespeare.

The thing of courtesy,

A rous'd with rage, with rage doth sympathize. Shakespeare.

Nature, in love to burn,

Hath dot'd her gaudy tins,

With her pie-matter to sympathize. Johnson.

The limits of his body is to every one a part of himself: he sympathizes, and is concerned for them. Locke.

Their countrymen were particularly attentive to all their stous, and sympathized with their heroes in all their adventures. Adams's Spectator.

Though the greatness of their mind exempts them from fear, yet none condole and sympathize more heartily. Collins.

2. To agree; to fit. Not proper.

Green is a pleasing colour, from a blue and a yellow mixed together, and by consequence blue and yellow are two colours which sympathize. Dryden's DuRoi's.

SYMPATHY. n. f. [sympatbie, Fr. sympathie.] Fellowfeeling; mutual sensibility; the quality of being affected by the affection of another.

A world of earthly blessings to my soul,
If sympathy of love unite our thoughts.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

You are not young; no more am I: go to, then, there's sympathy: you are merry, so am I, ha! ha! then there's more sympathy: you love sack, and so do I, would you desire better sympathy? Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

But what it is,

The action of my life is like it, which I'll keep, 'till 'till for sympathy. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

I started back;

It started back: but, pleas'd, I soon return'd;
Pleas'd it return'd as soon, with answering looks
Of sympathy and love. Milton's Paradise Lost.

They saw, but other sight instead, a crowd
Of ugly serpents: horror on them fell,
And sympathy. Milton.

Or sympathy, or some conatral force,
Powerful at greatest distance to unite,
With secret unity, things of like kind,
By secret conveyance. Milton's Paradise Lost.

There never was any heart truly great and generous, that was not all tender and compassionate: it is this noble quality that makes all men to be of one kind; for every man would be a distinct species to himself, were there no sympathy among individuals. South's Sermons.

Can kindness to desert like you's be strange?
Kindness by secret sympathy is ty'd,
For noble souls in nature are ally'd. Dryden.

There are such associations made in the minds of men; and to this might be attributed most of the sympathies and antipathies observable in them. Locke.

SYMPHONIOUS. adj. [from symphony.]

Harmonious; agreeing in sound.

Up he rode,
Follow'd with acclamation and the sound
Symphonies of ten thousand harps, that tun'd Angelick harmonies. Milton.

SYMPHONY. n. f. [symphonie, French; sym and phony.] Concert of instruments; harmony of mingled sounds.

A learned teacher from Pythagoras's school, where it was a maxim that the images of all things are latent in numbers, determines the comeliest proportion between breadths and heights, reducing symmetry to symphony, and the harmony of sound to a kind of harmony in sight. Wotton.

Speak, ye who best can tell, ye sons of light,
Angels! for ye behold him, and with songs
And choral symphonies, day without night, Circle his throne rejoicing. Milton's Par. Lost.

The trumpets sound,

And warlike symphony is heard around;
The marching troops through Athens take their way;

The great earl marshal orders their array. Dryden.

SYMPHYSIS. n. f. [sym and physis.]

Symphysis, in its original signification, denotes a connatecy, or growing together; and perhaps is meant of those bones which in young children are distinct, but after some years unite and consolidate into one bone. Wijeman.

SYMPOSIACK. adj. [sympotique, French; συμπωσιακός.] Relating to merry makings; happening where company is drinking together.

By desiring a secrecy to words spoke under the rose, we only mean in society and compositation, from the ancient custom of sympotick meetings to wear chaplets of roses about their heads. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

In some of those sympotick disputations amongst my acquaintance, I affirmed that the dietetick part of medicine depended upon scientific principles. Arbutnot.

SYMPTOM. n. f. [symptome, French; συμπτωμα.]

1. Something that happens concurrently with something else, not as the original cause, nor as the necessary or constant effect.

The symptoms, as Dr. Sydenham remarks, which are commonly febrile, are often nothing but the principles or seeds of a growing, but unripe gout. Blackmore.

2. A sign; a token.

Ten glorious campaigns are passed, and now,
like the sick man, we are expiring with all sorts of good symptoms. Swift.

SYMPTOMATICAL. adj. [sympmatique,

SYMPTOMATICK. Fr. from symptom.]

Happening concurrently or occasionally.

Symptomatical is often used to denote the difference between the primary and secondary causes in diseases; as a fever from pain is said to be sympmatical, because it arises from pain only; and therefore the ordinary means in fevers are not in such cases to be had recourse to, but to what will remove the pain; for, when that ceases, the fever will cease, without any direct means taken for that. Quincy.

By fomentation and a cataplasm the swelling was dissipated; and the fever, then appearing but sympmatical, lessened as the heat and pain mitigated. Wijeman's Surgery.

SYMPTOMATICALLY. adv. [from sympmatical.] In the nature of a symptom.

The causes of a bubo are vicious humours abounding in the blood, or in the nerves, excreted sometimes critically, sometimes sympmatically. Wijeman.

SYNOPSIS. n. f. [from syncope.] Contractor of words.

To outline all the modern synopsists, and thoroughly content my English readers, I intend to publish a Spectator that shall not have a single vowel in it. Spectator.

To SYNDCATE. v. n. [syndiquer, Fr. syn and cate.] To judge; to pass judgment on; to censure. An unusual word. Not in use.

Aristotle undertook to censure and syndicate his matter, and all law-makers before him. Hatervill on Providence.

SYNDROME. n. f. [syndrom.] Concurrent action; concurrence.

All things being linked together by an uninterrupted chain of causes, every single motion owns a dependance on such a syndrome of prequipped motives. Glanville's Scuffs.

SYNECDOCHE. n. f. [synecdoche, Fr. synecdoche.]

A figure by which part is taken for the whole, or the whole for part.

Because they are instruments of grace in the hand of God, and by these his holy spirit changes our hearts; therefore the whole work is attributed to them by a synecdoche; that is, they do in this manner the work for which God ordained them. Taylor's Worth Communicant.

SYNECDO-

SYNODICAL. adj. [from synodus.] Expressed by a synecdoche, implying a synecdoche.

Should I, Lindamer, bring you into hospitals, and show you there how many souls, narrowly lodged in synecdochical bodies, see their earthen cottages moulder away to dust, those miserable persons, by the loss of one limb after another, surviving but part of themselves, and living to see themselves dead and buried by piecemeal?

Boyle's Seraphick Love.

SYNEURO'SIS. n. f. [σύν and νεύρον.]

Syneurosis is when the connexion is made by a ligament. Of this in symplysis we find instances, in the connexion of the ossa pubis together, especially in women, by a ligamentous substance. In articulation, it is either round, as that which unites the head of the os femoris to the coxa; or broad, as the tendon of the patella, which unites it to the os tibiae.

Wyleman's Surgery.

SYNOD. n. f. [synodus, French; σύνδος.]

1. An assembly called for consultation: it is used particularly of ecclesiasticks. A provincial synod is commonly used, and a general council.

The glorious gods sit in hourly synod about thy particular prosperity. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Since the mortal and intestine jars 'Twixt thy seditious countrymen and us, It hath in solemn synod been decreed, 'T admit no traffick to our adverse towns. Shak.

The opinion was not only condemned by the synod, but imputed to the emperor as extreme madness. Bacon.

 Bears a command in't; though thy tackle's torn,
 Thou shew'st a noble vessel. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

A stately ship
 With all her braverly on, and tackle trim,
 Sails fill'd, and streamers waving,
 Courted by all the winds that hold them play. Milton.

As for tackle, the Boetians invented the oar;
 Dædalus, and his son Icarus, the masts and sails. Hygins.

Ere yet the tempest roars
 Stand to your tackles, mates, and stretch your oars. Dryden.

If he drew the figure of a ship, there was not a rope among the tackle that escap'd him. Addison's Spectator.

TACKLED. adj. [from tackle.] Made of ropes tack'd together.

My man shall
 Bring thee cords, made like a tackled stair,
 Which to the high top-gallant of my joy

They sell us their bark at a good price for tanning our hides into leather. Swift's Miscellanea.

2. To imbrown by the sun.

His face all tann'd with scorching sunny rays, As he had travell'd many a summer's day Through boiling lands of Araby and Ind. Spenser.
Like sun-parch'd quarters on the city gate, Such is thy tann'd skin's lamentable state. Dunne.
A brown for which heaven would disdain The galaxy, and stars be tann'd. Uranus's Land.

TANG for taken, ta'en. All poets.

Two trophies tare from the east and western shore,
And both those nations twice triumphed o'er.

May's Virgil.

TANG. n. f. [tanghe, Dutch, acid.]

1. A strong taste; a taste left in the mouth.

Since taken into the soul, is like a liquor poured into a vessel; so much of it as it fills it also seasons: so it is although the body of the liquor should be poured out again, yet still it leaves that tang behind it. South.

It is strange that the soul should never once recal-over any of its pure native thoughts, before it borrowed any thing from the body; never bring into the waking man's view any other ideas but what have a tang of the cake, and derive their original from that union. Locke.

2. Relish; taste. A low word.

There was not the least tang of religion, which is indeed the worst affectation in any thing he said or did. Atterbury.

3. Something that leaves a sting or pain behind it.

She had a tongue with a tang,

Would cry to a sailor, Go hang. Shak. Tempest.

4. Sound; tone: this is mistaken for tong or twang.

There is a pretty affectation in the Allemain, which gives them speech a different tang from ours.
Holder.

To TANG. v. n. [This is, I think, mistaken for twang] To ring with.

Be opposite with a kinsman, surly with thy servants; let thy tongue tang arguments of state;
put thyself into the trick of singularity.

Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

TANGENT. n. f. [tangent, Fr. tangens,
Latin.]

Tangent, in trigonometry, is a right line perpendicularly raised on the extremity of a radius, and which touches a circle so as not to cut it; but yet intersects another line without the circle called a secant, that is drawn from the centre, and which cuts the arc to which it is a tangent. Trevoux.

Nothing in this hypothesis can retain the planets in their orbs, but they would immediately desert them and the neighbourhood of the sun, and vanish away in tangents to their several circles into the mundane space. Bentley's Sermons.

TANGIBILITY. n. f. [from tangible.] The quality of being perceived by the touch.

TANGIBLE. adj. [from tango, Lat.] Perceptible by the touch.

Tangible bodies have no pleasure in the comfort of air, but endeavour to subact it into a more dense body. Bacon.

By the touch, the tangible qualities of bodies are discerned, as hard, soft, smooth. Locke.

To TANGLE. v. a. [See entangle.]

1. To implicate; to knit together.

2. To ensnare; to entrap.

She means to tangle mine eyes too.

'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream.

Shakespeare.

I do, quoth he, perceive

My king is tangled in affection to

A creature of the queen's, lady Anne Bullen.

Shakespeare.

You must lay lime to tangle her desires

By wailful sonnets, whose composed rhimes

Shall be full fraught with fervent vows. Shak.

If the picture, the dauphin, well appointed,

Stands with the snares of war to tangle thee. Shak.

Now is't victorious

Among thy slain self-kill'd,

Not willingly, but tangled in the fold

Of dire necessity, Milton's Agonistes.

Skill'd to retire, and in retiring draw

Hearts after them, tangled in amorous nets. Mil.

With subtle snatches cheat,
They're catch'd in knot-like nets;
In which when once they are entangled,
The more they stir, the more they're tangled.
Rudibras.

3. To embroil; to embarrass.

When my simple weakness strays,

Tangled in forbidden ways,

He, my shepherd, is my guide,

He's before me, on my side. Crabbe.

To TANGLE. v. n. To be entangled.

Shrubs and tangling bushes had perplex'd

All path of man or beast. Anon.

TANGLE. n. f. [from the verb.] A knot of things interwoven in one another, or different parts of the same thing perplexed.

He leading swiftly row'd

In tangles, and made intricate seem'st,

To mischief swift. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Sport with Amaryllis in the shade,

Or with the tangles of Nereia's hair. Milton.

TANIST. n. f. [an Irish word; an tannister, Erse.]

Presently after the death of any of their captains, they assemble themselves to chuse another in his stead, and nominate commonly the next brother; and then next to him do they chuse one of the blood to be tanist, who shall next succeed him in the said captaincy. Spenser on Ireland.

TANISTRY. n. f. [from tanist.]

The Irish hold their lands by tanistry, which is no more than a personal estate for his life-time that is tanist, by reason he is admitted therunto by election. Spenser on Ireland.

If the Irish be not permitted to purchase estates of freeholds, which might descend to their children, must they not continue their custom of tan-istry? which makes all their possessions uncertain. Davies on Ireland.

By the Irish custom of tanistry, the chieftains of every country, and the chief of every sept, had no longer estate than for life in their territories; and when their chieftains were dead, their sons, or next heirs, did not succeed them, but their tanists, who were elective, and purchased their elections by strong hand. Davies on Ireland.

TANK. n. f. [tanque, Fr.] A large cistern or basin.

Handle your pruning knife with dexterity; go tightly to your business: you have cost me much, and must earn it: here's plentiful provision, calcul; salading in the garden, and water in the tank; and in holy days, the licking of a platter of rice when you deserve it. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

TANKARD. n. f. [tanquaerd, Fr. tankaerd, Dutch; tancaird, Irish.] A large vessel with a cover, for strong drink.

Hath his tankard touch'd your brain?

Sure they're fall'n asleep again. Ben Jonson.

Marius was the first who drank out of a silver tankard, after the manner of Bacchus.

Arbutnot on Coins.

When any calls for ale, fill the largest tankard cup top full. Swift.

TANKER. n. f. [from tan.] One whose trade is to tan leather.

Tanners use that lime which is newly drawn out of the kiln, and not slack'd with water or air.

Anon.

TANKPIT. n. f. [from tan and pit.] A pit where leather is impregnated with bark.

TANNEY. n. f. [tanacetum, Lat.] An odorous plant. Miller.

TANTALISM. n. f. [from tantalism.] A punishment like that of Tantalus.

A lively representation of a person lying under the torments of such a tantalism, or platonick hell.

Addison's Spectator.

To TANTALIZE. v. a. [from Tantalus, whose punishment was to starve among fruits and water which he could not touch.] To torment by the show of pleasures which cannot be reached.

Thy vain desires, at strife

Within themselves, have tantaliz'd thy life. Dryd.
The maid once seduced was not suffered to tantalize as the male part of the commonwealth. Addison.

TANTAMOUNT. n. f. [Fr.] Equivalent.

If one third of our coin were gone, and men had equally one third less money than they have, it must be tantamount; what I 'scape of one third less, another must make up. Locke.

TANTIVY. adv. [from the note of a hunting horn, so expressed in articulate sounds. From Tantá vi, says Skinner.] To ride tantivy is to ride with great speed.

TANTLING. n. f. [from Tantalus.] One seized with hopes of pleasure unattainable.

Hard life,

To be still hot summer's rantings, and
The shrinking slaves of winter. Shakespeare.

To TAP. v. a. [tappen, Dutch; tapper, French.]

1. To touch lightly; to strike gently.
2. [Tappen, Dutch.] To pierce a vessel; to broach a vessel. It is used likewise of the liquor.

That blood already, like the pelican,

Hast thou tapt out, and drunkenly caroused. Shak.

He has been tapping his liquors, while I have been spilling my blood. Addison.

Wait with patience till the tumour becomes troublesome, and then tap it with a lancet.

Sharp's Surgery.

TAP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A gentle blow.

This is the right fencing grace, tap for tap, and so part fair. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Each shakes her fan with a smile, then gives her right hand woman a tap upon the shoulder.

Addison's Spectator.

As at hot cockles once I laid me down,
And felt the weighty hand of many a clown, Buxoma gave a gentle tap. Gay's Pastoral.

So Huron-leeches, when their patient lies
In feverish restlessness with unclos'd eyes,
Apply with gentle strokes their osier rod,
And tap by tap invite the sleepy god. Harte.

2. A pipe at which the liquor of a vessel is let out.

A gentleman was inclined to the knight of Gascogne's distemper, upon hearing the noise of a tap running. Derham.

TAPER. n. f. [teppan, Sax.] A narrow fillet or band of linen.

Will you buy any tape, or lace for your cape,
My dainty duck, my dear-a? Shakespeare.

This pouch that's ty'd with tape

I'll wager, that the prize shall be my due. Gay.

On once a stock-bed, but repair'd with straw,
With tape-ty'd curtains never meant to draw. Pope.

TAPER. n. f. [tapen, Saxon.] A wax candle; a light.

Get me a taper in my study, Lucius:

When it is lighted, come and call me. Shakespeare.

My daughter and little son we'll dress

With rounds of waxen tapers on their heads,

And rattles in their hands. Shakespeare.

If any catch the pure taper from my hand, and hold it to the devil, he will only burn his own fingers, but shall not rob me of the reward of my good intention. Taylor.

There the fair light,

Like Hero's taper in the window plac'd,
Such fate from the malignant air did find,
As that expos'd to the boisterous wind. Waller.

To see this fleet,

Heav'n, as if three wanted lights above,
For tapers made two glaring comets rise. Dryden.

TAPER.

TAPER. adj. [from the form of a taper.] Regularly narrowed from the bottom to the top; pyramidal; conical.

Her taper fingers, and her parting breath.

He praises.

From the heaven the ether differs in his teeth, which are canines; and in his tail, which is feline, or a long taper.

TAPER. v. n. To grow gradually smaller.

The bark is made tapering in form of a pillar, the lower vertebrae being the broadest and largest; the superior lesser and lesser, for the greater stability of the trunk.

Such be the dog,
With tapering tail, that nimbly cuts the wind.

TAPETRY. n. f. [tapsteria, tapistria, tapis, French; tapetum, Lat.] Cloth woven in regular figures.

In the desk
That's cover'd o'er with Turkish tapetry,
There is a purse of ducats,
The casements are with golden tissue spread,
And horses hoofs, for earth, on silken tapet try tread.

One room is hung with tapetry, in which are wrought the figures of the great persons of the family.

TAPET. n. f. [tapetia, Lat.] Worked or figured stuff.

To their work they sit, and each doth chuse
What story she will for her tapet take.

TAPROOT. n. f. [tap and root.] The principal stem of the root.

Some put under the trees raised off dead, about four inches below the place where they sow their seeds, a small piece of tile to stop the running down of the taproot, which occasions it to branch when it comes to the tile.

TAPSTER. n. f. [from tap.] One whose business is to draw beer in an alehouse.

The oath of a lover is no stronger than the word of a tapster; they are both the confurers of false reckonings.

Though you change your place, you need not change your trade: I'll be your tapster still.

The world is come now to that pass, that the vintner and tapster may broach what religion they please; and the apothecary may mingle her as he pleases.

Though the painting grows decay'd,
The house will never lose its trade;
Nay, though the treacherous tapster Thomas Hangs a new angel two doors from us.

TAR. n. f. [tane, Saxon; tarre, Dutch; tierre, Dan.] Liquid pitch; the turpentine of the pine or fir drained out by fire.

Then, foaming tar, their bridles they would champ,

And trampling the sup element would fiercely rap.

A man will not lose a hog for a halfpennyworth of tar.

TAR. n. f. [from tar used in ships.] A sailor; a seaman, in contempt.

In senates build, and fierce in war,
A land commander, and a tar.

TO TAR. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To smear over with tar.

2. To tease to provoke. [vaperu.]

There has been much to do on both sides; and the nation holds it no sin to tarre them on to controversy.

Two curs shall tame each other; pride alone
Must tar the mastiffs on, as 'twere the bone.

TARANTULA. n. f. [Italian; tarantula, French.] An insect whose bite is only cured by music.

VOL. II.

This word, lovers, did no less pierce poor Pyrocles, than the right tone of music toucheth him that is sick of the tarantula.

He that uses the word tarantula, without having any idea of what it stands for, means nothing at all by it.

TARDATION. n. f. [tardo, Latin.] The act of hindering or delaying.

TARDIGRADOUS. adj. [tardigradus, Lat.] Moving slowly.

It is but a slow and tardigradous animal, preying upon advantage, and otherwise may be escaped.

TARDIEY. adv. [from tardy.] Slowly; sluggishly.

He was indeed the glass,
Wherein the noble youth did dress themselves;
Breaking thick, which nature made his blemish,
Became the accents of the radiant;
For those that could speak slow and tardily,
Would turn their own perfection to abuse,
To seem like him.

TARDINESS. n. f. [from tardy.] Slowness; sluggishness; unwillingness to action or motion.

A tardiness in nature,
Which often leaves the history unspoke
That it intends to do.

TARDITY. n. f. [tarditas, from tardus, Latin; tardusité, Fr.] Slowness; want of velocity.

Suppose some observable tardity in the motion of light, and then ask how we should arrive to perceive it?

Our explication includes time in the notions of velocity and tardity.

TARDY. adj. [tardus, Lat. tardy, Fr.]

1. Slow; not swift.

Nor should their age by years be told,
Whose souls more swift than motion climb,
And check the tardy flight of time.

2. Sluggish; unwilling to action or motion.

Behold that navy which a while before
Provok'd the tardy English close to fight,
Now draw their beaten vessels close to shore,
As larks lie dar'd to thorn the hobbies flight.

When certain to overcome, inclin'd to save,
Tardy to vengeance, and with mercy brave.

3. Dilatory; late; tedious.

You shall have letters from me to my son
In your behalf, to meet you on the way;
Be not tardy by unwise delay.

Death he as oft accus'd
Of tardy execution, since denounc'd
The day of his offence.

The tardy plants in our cold orchards plac'd,
Revere their fruit for the next age's taste;
There a small grain in some few months will be
A firm, a lofty, and a spacious tree.

Tardy of aid, unfeeling heavy eyes,
Awake, and with the dawning day arise.

You may freely censure him for being tardy in his payments.

4. Unwary. A low word.

Yield, scoundrel base, quoth she, or die,
Thy life is mine, and liberty;
But if thou think'st I took thee tardy,
And dar'st presume to be so hardy
To try thy fortune o'er a-fresh,
I'll wave my title to thy flesh.

5. Criminal; offending. A low word.

If they take them tardy, they endeavor to humble them by way of reprisal; those slips and mismanagements are usually ridiculed.

TO TARDY. v. a. [tarder, Fr. from the adjective.] To delay; to hinder.

I chose
Camillo for the minister, to poison
My friend Pollexenes; which had been done,
But that the good mind of Camillo tardy'd
My swift command.

TARRE. n. f. [from tarre, Dutch, to consume, Shaver.] A weed that grows among corn.

Through hatred of tarre, the corn in the field of God is plucked up.

The liberal contributions such teachers met with, served to invite more labourers, where their feed-time was their harvest; and by sowing tarre they reaped gold.

My country neighbours begin not to think of being in general, which is being abstracted from all its inferior species, before they come to think of the fly in their sheep, or the tarre in their corn.

FARE. n. f. [French.] A mercantile word denoting the weight of any thing containing a commodity; also the allowance made for it.

The women beat their breasts, their cheeks they tare.

TARGE. n. f. [targa, Saxon; targe, Ital targe, French; tarian, Welch, which seems the original of the rest; an taargett, Erse.] A kind of buckler or shield borne on the left arm.

It seems to be commonly used for a defensive weapon less in circumference than a shield.

Glancing on his helmet made a large
And open gash thereon, were not his targe
That broke the violence.

I took all their seven points in my target.

Henceforward will I bear
Upon my target three fair shining suns.

The arms she useth most is the target, to shroud herself under, and fence away the blow.

Those leaves
They gather'd, broad as Amazonian targe.

The Greeks the gates approach'd, their targets cast
Over their heads, some scaling-ladders plac'd Against the walls.

TARGETIER. n. f. [from target.] One armed with a target.

For horsemen and for targetiers none could with him compare.

TARGUM. n. f. [תרגום] A paraphrase on the pentateuch in the Chaldee language.

TARIFF. n. f. [perhaps a Spanish word; tarif, Fr.] A cartel of commerce.

This branch of our trade was regulated by a tariff, or declaration of the duties of import and export.

TARN. n. f. [tiorn, Islandick.] A bog; a fen; a marsh; a pool; a quagmire.

TO TARNISH. v. a. [tarnir, French.] To sully; to soil; to make not bright.

Let him pray for resplendency, that he may discover nothing that may discredit the cause, tarnish the glory, and weaken the example of the suffering.

Low waves the rooted forest, vex'd, and she is What of its tarnish'd honours yet remain.

TO TARNISH. v. n. To lose brightness.

If a fine object should tarnish by having a great many see it, or the music should run mostly into one man's ears, these satisfactions would be made inclosure.

TARPAWLING. n. f. [from tar.]

1. Hempen cloth smeared with tar.

Some the gall'd ropes with dauby mauling bind,
Or searcloth matts with strong tarpawling coars.

2. A sailor, in contempt.

Was any thing wanting to the extravagance of this age, but the making a living tarpaulin and a swabber the hero of a tragedy?

TARROON. n. f. A plant called herb-dragon.

TARRIANCE. n. f. [from tarry.] Stay; delay; perhaps sojourn.

Dispatch me hence;

Come, answer not; but do it presently.

I am impatient of my tarrance. Shakespeare.

TARRIER. n. f. [This should be written terrier, from terre, French, the earth.]

1. A sort of small dog, that hunts the fox or otter out of his hole.

The fox is earthed; but I shall send my two tarriers in after him. Dryden.

2. One that tarries or slays.

To TARRY. v. n. [targir, French.]

1. To stay; to continue in a place.

Tarry I here, I but attend on death;

But fly I hence, I fly away from life. Shakespeare.

I yet am tender, young, and full of fear,

And dare not die, but fain would tarry here. Dry.

2. To delay; to be long in coming.

Thou art my deliverer, make no tarrying, O God! Psalms.

Who hath woe and redness of eyes? they that tarry long at the wine. Proverbs, xxiii. 30.

3. To wait; to expect attending.

Tarry ye here for us until we come again. Exodus, xxiv. 14.

To TARRY. v. a. To wait for.

I will go drink with you, but I cannot tarry dinner. Shakespeare.

TARSEL. n. f. A kind of hawk.

Hist! Rome, hist! O for a falconer's voice,

To lure this tarsel gentle back again! Shakespeare.

A falconer Henry is, when Emma hawks;

With her of tarsels and of lures he talks. Prior.

TARSUS. n. f. [társos; tarsé, Fr.] The space betwixt the lower end of the focal bones of the leg, and the beginning of the five long bones that are jointed with, and bear up the toes; it comprises seven bones, and the three ossa cuneiformia. DiA.

1. Sour; acid; acidulated; sharp of taste.

2. Sharp; keen; severe.

Why to tart a favour

To trumpet such good tidings? Shakespeare.

When his humour grew tart, as being now in the less of favour, they brake forth into certain sudden excesses. Weston.

TART. n. f. [tarte, French; tarta, Ital.]

tart, Dan.] A small pie of fruit.

Figures, with divers coloured earths; under the windows of the house on that side near which the garden stands, be but toys; you may see as good fights in tarts. Bacon's Essays.

TARTANE. n. f. [tartana, Ital. tartane, French.] A vessel much used in the Mediterranean, with one mast and a three-cornered sail.

I set out from Marseilles to Genoa in a tartane, and arrived late at a small French port called Cassin. Addison.

TARTAR. n. f. [tartarus, Lat.]

1. Hell. A word used by the old poets.

Now obsolete.

With this damned ghost he governeth, And tartar rules, and tartar tempereth. Spenser.

He's in tartar like worse than hell;

A devil in an everlasting garment hath him,

One whose hard heart is button'd up with steel. Shakespeare.

[Tartre, Fr.] Tartar, is what sticks to the casks, either white or red, as the flavour of the wine from whence it comes:

the white is preferable, as containing less dross or earthy parts; the best comes from Germany, and is the tartar of the rhenish wine. Galery.

The fermented juice of grapes is partly turned into liquid drops or lees, and partly into that crust or dry feculence that is commonly called tartar; and this tartar may by the fire be divided into five differing substances, four of which are not acid, and the other not so manifestly acid as the tartar itself. Boyle.

TARTAREAN. adj. [tartarus, Latin.] Hellish.

His throne mix'd with tartarean sulphur. Mil.

TARTAREOUS. adj. [from tartar.]

His mental powers were equal to greater tasks. Atterbury.

No happier task these faded eyes pursue,

To read and weep is all they now can due. Pope.

3. To take to task. To reprove; to reprimand.

A holy man took a soldier to task upon the subject of his profession.

He discovered some remains of his nature when he met with a football, for which Sir Roger took him to task. Addison.

To TASK. v. a. [from the noun.] To burthen with something to be done.

Forth he goes,

Like to a harvestman, that's task'd to mow,

Or all, or lose his hire. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

Some things of weight,

That task our thoughts concerning us and France. Shakespeare.

I have drunk but one cup to-night, and that was craftily qualified too; and behold what innovation it makes here. I am unfortunate in the infirmity, and care not task my weakness with any more. Shakespeare's Othello.

Divert thy thoughts at home;

There task thy maids, and exorcise the loom. Dryden.

TASKER. n. f. [task and master.]

TASKMASTER. n. f. One who imposes tasks.

All is, if I have grace to use it so.

As ever in my great taskmaster's eye. Milton.

The service of sin is perfect slavery; and he who will pay obedience to the commands of it, shall find it an unreasonable taskmaster, and an unmeasurable exactor. South.

Hear, ye fallen power's below;

Hear, ye taskers of the dead. Dryden and Lee.

TASSIL. n. f. [tassil, French; tassillus, low Latin.] An ornamental bunch of silk or glittering substances.

Then took the squire an horn of bugle small,

Which hung adown his side in twisted gold.

Thus a ploughing staff unweaving found,
As he his tollforce team that way did guide,
And brought them up in ploughman's time to bide.
Spenser.

We fainted that do run
By the triple Hecate's team,
From the presence of the sun,
Following darkness like a dream,
Now are troick.

Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dream.
Making such difference betwixt wake and sleep,
As is the difference betwixt day and night,
The hour before the heavenly harness'd team
Begins his golden progress in the east.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.
I am in love; but a team of horse shall not pluck that from me, nor who will I love. Shakespeare.

After the declining sun
Had chang'd the shadow, and their task was done,
Home with their weary team they took their way.
Roscommun.

He heav'd with more than human force to move
A weighty stone, the labour of a team. Dryden.
In stiff clays they may plow one acre of wheat
With a team of horse. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. Any number passing in a line.
Like a long team of snowy swans on high,
Which clap their wings, and cleave the liquid sky.
Dryden.

TEAR. n. f. [as in this word is pronounced ee; teap, Saxon; taart, Dan. tear rhymes to cheer.]

1. The water which violent passion forces from the eyes.

She comes; and I'll prepare
My star-stain'd eyes to see her miseries. Shakespeare.

The pretty valuing sea refus'd to drown me,
Knowing that thou wouldst have me drown'd on shore.
Shakespeare.

With tears as salt as sea, through thy unkindness.
Shakespeare.

Cromwell, I did not think to shed a tear in all my miseries; but thou hast forc'd me.
Let's dry our eyes. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Tears are the effects of compression of the moisture of the brain upon dilatation of the spirits.
Bacon's Natural History.

She silently a gentle tear let fall.
Milton.

2. Any moisture trickling in drops.
Let Arabj extol her happy coast,
Her fragrant flowers, her trees with precious tears,
Her second harvests. Dryden.

TO TEAR. pret. tore, anciently tare; part. pass. torn. [teapan, Saxon; tara, Swedish; ea, is pronounced as a; tear rhymes to square.]

1. To pull in pieces; to lacerate; to rend; to separate by violent pulling.

Come, feeling night!
And with thy bloody and invisible hand
Cancel and tear to pieces that great bond
Which keeps me pale. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The one went out from me; and I said, Surely he is torn in pieces, and I saw him not since.
Gen. xlv. 28.

John tore off lord Strutt's servants clothes; now and then they came home naked.
Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

Ambassadors sent to Carthage were like to be torn to pieces by the populace.
Arbutnot.

2. To laniate; to wound with any sharp point drawn along.
Old men with dust deform'd their hoary hair;
The women beat their breasts, their cheeks they tore.
Shakespeare.

Neither shall men tear themselves for them in mourning, to comfort them for the dead.
Jer. xvi. 7.

3. To break, or take away by violence.
As storm the skies, and tears the ground,
Thus rag'd the prince, and scatter'd death around.
Dryden.

TO divide violently; to shatter.

Is it not so much reason to say, that God bestows fatherly authority, when he suffers one in possession of it to have his government torn in pieces, and shared by his subjects. Locke.

5. To pull with violence; to drive violently.

He tear'd, he beat his breast; he tore his hair.
Dryden.

From harden'd oak, or from a rock's cold womb,
At least thou art from some fierce tyger's come;
Or on rough seas from their foundation torn
Got by the winds, and in a tempest born. Dryden.

Blush rather, that you are a slave to passion,
Which, like a whirlwind, tears up all your virtues,
And gives you not the leisure to consider. A. Phillips.

6. To take away by sudden violence.

Solyman
Rhodes and Buda from the Christians tore. Wallers.
The hand of fate
Has torn thee from me, and I must forget thee.
Addison.

- 7 To make a violent rent:
In the midst a tearing groan did break
The name of Anthony. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleop.

TO TEAR. v. n. [tieren, Dutch.] To fume; to rave; to rant turbulently.

All men transported into outrages for small trivial matters, fall under the incendo of this bull, that ran tearing mad for the pinching of a mouse.
L'Estrange.

TEAR. n. f. [from the verb.] A rent; a fissure.

TEARER. n. f. [from to tear.] He who rends or tears; one who blusters.

TEARFALLING. adj. [tear and fall.] Tender; shedding tears.

I am in
So far in blood, that sin will pluck on sin;
Tearfalling pity dwells not in this eye. Shakespeare.

TEARFUL. adj. [tear and full.] Weeping; full of tears.

Is't meet that he Should leave the helmy and, like a fearful lad,
With tearful eyes add water to the sea? Shakespeare.

This clears the cloudy front of wrinkled care,
And dries the tearful sluices of despair;
Charm'd with that virtuous draught, th' exalted mind

All sense of woe delivers to the wind. Pope's Odyssey.

TO TEASE. v. a. [teapan, Saxon.]

1. To comb or unravel wool or flax.
2. To scratch cloth in order to level the nap.

3. To torment with importunity; to vex with assiduous impertinence.

Not by the force of carnal reason,
But indefatigable teasing. Bentley.

My friends always tease me about him, because he has no estate. Spektor.

After having been present in public debates, he was teased by his mother to inform her of what had passed. Addison.

We system-makers can sustain
The thesis, which you grant was plain;
And with remarks and comments tease you,
In case the thing before was easy. Prior.

TEASEL. n. f. [teap, Saxon; -disfucut, Lat.] A plant.

The species are three: one is call'd carduus fallennus, and is of singular use in raising the nap upon woollen cloth. Milton.

TEASER. n. f. [from tease.] Any thing that torments by incessant importunity.

A fly buzzing at his ear, makes him deaf to the best advice. If you would have him come to himself, you must take off his little teaser, which holds his reason at bay. Collier.

TEAF. n. f. [teaf, Welsh; etc., Saxon; teffe, Dutch; tefen, French.] The day of a beast; anciently the pap of a woman.

Even at thy tear thou hadst thy tyranny. Shak.
Shows cause a fruitful year, watering the earth better than rain; for the earth sucks it as out of the tear. Bacon.

When we perceive that bats have teats, we infer,
that they suckle their younglings with milk.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

It more pleas'd my sense,
Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the teats
Of ewe or goat dripping with milk at even. Mil.
Infants sleep, and are seldom awake but when hunger calls for the teat. Locke.

The goat, how bright amidst her fellow stars,
Kind Amalthæa, reach'd her teat distant
With milk, thy early food. Prior.

TE'CHILY. adv. [from techy.] Peevishly; fretfully; frowardly.

TE'CHINESS. n. f. [from techy.] Peevishness; fretfulness.

TE'CHNICAL. adj. [τεχνικός; technique, Fr.] Belonging to arts; not in common or popular use.

In technical words, or terms of arts, they refrain not from calling the same substance sometimes the sulphur, and sometimes the mercury, of a body.

Locke.

TE'CHY. adj. Peevish; fretful; irritable; easily made angry; froward.

I cannot come to Cressid but by Pandar,
And he is as techy to be woo'd to wooe,
As she is stubborn-chaste against all sute. Shaksp.
When it did taste the wormwood on the nipple, and felt it bitter, pretty fool, to see it techy, and fall out with the dog! Shaksp.

TETC'ONICK. adj. [τετονικός.] Pertaining to building. Bailey.

TO TED. v. a. [teaban, Saxon, to prepare.]
To lay grass newly mown in rows.

The smell of grain, or tedded grass, or kine,
Or dairy, each rural sight, each rural sound. Mil.
Hay-makers following the mowers, and casting it abroad, they call tedding. Mortimer's Husbandry.
Prudent his fall'n heaps

Collecting, cherish'd with the tepid wreaths
Of tedded grass, and the sun's mellowing beams, Rival'd with artful heats. Phillips.

TE'DDER, or TE'THER. n. f. [tudder, Dut.
tindt, a rope, Islandick.]

1. A rope with which a horse is tied in the field, that he may not pasture too wide.
Teigher, Erie.

2. Any thing by which one is restrained.
We lived joyfully, going abroad within our ted-der. Bacon.

We shall have them against the wall; we know the length of their tedder; they cannot run far from us. Child.

TE DEUM. n. f. An hymn of the church, so called from the two first words of the Latin.

The choir,
With all the choicest musick of the kingdom,
Together sung a Deum. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
Te Deum was sung at St. Paul's after the victory. Bacon.

TE'DIOUS. adj. [tedious, Fr. tedium, Lat.]

1. Wearisome by continuance; troublesome; irksome.

The one intense, the other still remiss, Cannot well suit with either, but soon prove Tedious alike. Milton.

Pity only on fresh objects stays,
But with the tedious light of woes decays. Dryden.

2. Wearisome by prolixity. Used of authors or performances.

They unto whom we shall seem tedious are in some injured by us, because it is in their own hands to spare that about which they are not willing to endure. Hooker.

That I be not further tedious unto thee, hear us of thy clemency a few words. Ally, xiv. 4.

Chief mastery to tedious

With long and tedious hawkc fabled knights. Mil.

3. Slow.

But then the road was smooth and fair to see,
With such insensible declivity,
That what men thought a tedious course to run,
Was finish'd in the hour it first begun. Harris.

TE'DIOUSLY. adv. [from tedious.] In such a manner as to weary.

TE'DIOUSNESS. n. f. [from tedious.]

1. Wearisomeness by continuance.

She dislikes them all within a while;
And in the sweetest finds a tediousness. Daniel.

2. Wearisomeness by prolixity.

In vain we labour to persuade them, that any thing can take away the tediousness of prayer, except it be brought to the same measure and form which themselves assign. Hooker.

3. Prolixity; length.

Since brevity's the soul of wit,
And tediousness the limbs and outward flourishes,
I will be brief. Shaksp.

4. Uneasiness; tirefulness; quality of wearying.

In those very actions whereby we are especially perfected in this life, we are not able to persist; forced we are with very weariness, and that often to interrupt them; which tediousness cannot fall into those operations that are in the state of bliss when our union with God is complete. Hooker.

More than kisses, letters mingle souls,
For these friends absent speak: this ease controls
The tediousness of my life. Daniel.

TO TERM. v. n. [team, Saxon, offspring.]

2. To bring young.

If the must team,
Create her child of spleen, that it may live,
And be a thwart dinatur'd torment to her. Shak.

2. To be pregnant; to engender young.

Have we more sons? or are we like to have?
Is not my teeming date drunk up with time,
And wilt thou pluck my fair son from mine age?
Shaksp.

When the rising spring adorns the mead,
Teeming buds and cheerful greens appear. Dryden.

There are teeming truths, the basis upon which a great many others rest: these are teeming truths, rich in store, with which they furnish the mind, and, like the lights of heaven, give light and evidence to other things. Locke.

3. To be full; to be charged as a breeding animal.

We live in a nation where there is scarce a single head that does not team with politics. Addison.

TO TERM. v. a.

1. To bring forth; to produce.

What's the newest grief?
Each minute terms a new one. Shaksp. Macbeth.
Common mother, thou Whose womb unmeasurable, and infinite breast,
Terms and feeds all. Shaksp.

The earth obey'd; and fruit
Op'ning her fertile womb, term'd at a birth Innumerable living creatures. Milton's Parad. Lost.

The deluge wrought such a change, that the earth d d not then term forth its increase, as formerly, of its own accord, but required culture.
Woodward's Natural History.

2. To pour. A low word, imagined by Skinner to come from kommen Danish, to draw out; to pour. The Scots retain it: as, team that water out; hence Scots took this word.

Term out the remainder of the ale into the tankard, and fill the glass with small beer.
Swift's Direction to the Butler.

TERMER. n. f. [from term.] One that brings young.

TERMINAL. adj. [terminal, Saxon.]

1. Pregnant; prolific.

2. Brimful. Antiquari.

TERMINLESS. adj. [from term.] Unfruitful; not prolific.

Such wars, such waste, such fiery tracks of dearth,
Their zeal hath left, and such a terminless earth. Dryd.

TERR. n. f. [tiran, Saxon, to kindle; tenen, Flemish, to vex; teonan, Saxon, injuries.]

Sorrow; grief. Not in use.

Arrived there,
That barehead knight for dread and doleful terr
Would fain have fled, ne durst approachen near. Spenser.

Fry not in heartless grief and doleful terr. Spens.
My heart bleeds
To think o' th' terr that I have turn'd you to.

Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of terr. Shaksp.

TO TERN. v. a. [from tinan, to kindle, Saxon.] To excite; to provoke to do a thing. Not in use. Spenser.

TERNS. n. f. [from teen for ten.] The years reckoned by the termination teen;
as, thirteen, fourteen.

Our author would excuse these youthful scenes,
Begotten at his entrance in his teens,
Some childish fancies may approve the toy,
Some like she muse the more for being a boy. Granville.

TEETH. the plural of tooth.
Who can open the doors of his face? his teeth are terrible round about. Job, xli. 14.

TO TEETH. v. n. [from the noun.] To breed teeth; to be at the time of dentition.

When the symptoms of teething appear, the gums ought to be relaxed by softening ointment.
Archiebald on Diet.

TE'GUMENT. n. f. [tegumentum, Latin.] Cover; the outward part. This word is seldom used but in anatomy or physicks.

Clip and trim those tender strings in the fashion of beard, or other hairy teguments.

Proceed by section, dividing the skin, and separating the teguments. Wise man's Surgery.

In the nutmeg another tegument is the mace between the green pericarpium and the hard shell.

TO TEH-HE. v. n. [a cant word made from the sound.] To laugh with a loud and more insolent kind of cachinnation;
to titter.

They laugh'd and teh-he'd with derision,
To see them take your deposition. Hudibras.

TEIL tree. n. f. [tilia, Lat.] The same with linden or lime tree: which see.

A teitree and an oak have their substance in them when they cast their leaves. Isaiah, vi. 13.

TEINT. n. f. [teinte, French.] Colour; touch of the pencil.

Glazed colours have a vivacity which can never be imitated by the most brilliant colours, because the different teints are simply laid on, each in its place, one after another. Dryden.

TELARY. adj. [tela, a web, Lat.] Spinning webs.

The pictures of telary spiders, and their position in the web, is commonly made lateral, and regarding the horizon; although we shall commonly find it downward, and their heads respecting the centre.

TE'LESCOPE. n. f. [telescope, Fr. teles, and skopos.] A long glass by which distant objects are viewed.

The telescope discovers to us distant wonders in the heavens, and shows the milky way, and the bright cloudy spots, in a very dark sky, to be a collection of little stars. Watts.

TELESCOPICAL adj. [from telescope.] Belonging to a telescope; seeing at a distance.

To TELL v. a. preterite and part. pass. sold. [tellan, Saxon; tælan, tellen, Dut. talen, Danish.]

1. To utter; to express; to speak.
I will not eat till I have told mine errand.
Gen. xxiv. 33.

Thy message might in telling wound,
And in performing end us. Milton.

2. To relate; to rehearse.
I will declare what wise men have told from their fathers, and have not hid.
Job, xv. 18.
When Gideon heard the telling of the dream, and the interpretation, he worshipped.
Judges, vii. 13.

He longer will delay to hear thee tell
His generation. Milton.

You must know; but break, O break my heart,
Before I tell my fatal story out,
Th' usurper of my throne is my wife! Dryden.
The rest are vanish'd, none repairs'd the gate,
And not a man appears to tell their fate.
Pope's Odyssey.

3. To teach; to inform.
He gently ask'd, where all the people be,
Which in that stately building wont to dwell?
Who answer'd him full soft, he could not tell. Spenser.
I told him of myself; which was as much
As to have ask'd him pardon.
Shakspeare, Antony and Cleopatra.

Tell me now, what lady is the same,
To whom you swore a secret pilgrimage,
That you to-day promis'd to tell me of? Shakspeare.
The fourth part of a shewel of silver will I give to the man of God to tell us our way. 1 Sam. ix. 8.
Saint Paul telleth us, we must needs be subject not only for fear, but also for conscience sake.
Bishop Sanderfon.

Tell me how may I know him, how adore. Milton.

4. To discover; to betray.
They will tell it to the inhabitants. Num. xiv. 14.

5. To count; to number.
Here lies the learned Savile's heir,
So early wife, and lasting fair,
That none, except her years they told,
Thought her a child, or thought her old. Waller.
Numerous falls the fearful only tell;
Courage from hearts, and not from numbers, grows.
Dryden.

A child can tell twenty before he has any idea of Infinite. Locke.

She doubts if two and two make four,
Though she has told them ten times o'er. Prior.

6. To make excuses. A low word.
Tush, never tell me; I take it much unkindly,
That thou, Iago, who hast had my purse
As if the strings were thine, shouldst know of this,
Shakspeare.

To TELL v. n.

1. To give an account; to make report.
I will compare thine glair, O Lord, that I may publish with the voice of thanksgiving, and tell of all thy wondrous works. Psal. xxvii. 7.

Ye that live and move, fair creatures I tell,
Tell, if ye saw, how came I thus, how here? Milton.

2. To TELL on. To inform of. A doubtful phrase.

David saved neither man nor woman alive, to bring tidings to Gath, saying, Left they should tell on us, saying, So did David. 1 Sam. xxvii. 11.

TELLER n. s. [from tell.]

1. One who tells or relates.
2. One who numbers; a numberer.
3. A teller is an officer of the exchequer, of which there are four in number: their business is to receive all monies due to the king, and give the clerk of the pelf a bill to charge him therewith: they also pay all persons any money payable to them by the king, by warrant from the auditor of the receipt: they also make books of receipts and payments, which they deliver to the lord treasurer. Cowell.

TELLTALL n. s. [tell and tale.] One who gives malicious information; one who carries officious intelligence.

You speak to Calcas, and to such a man
That is no hearing telltale. Shakspeare, Julius Caesar.
What, shall these papers lie like telltale here?
Shakspeare.

Let not the heavens hear these telltale women Rail on the Lord's anointed. Shakspeare.

'Tis done: report displays her telltale wings,
And to each ear the news and tidings brings. Fairfax.

And to the telltale sun declare
Our conceal'd solemnity. Milton.

Eurydice and he are prisoners here,
But will not long be so: this telltale ghost
Perhaps will clear them both. Dryden and Lee.

A telltale out of school
Is of all wits the greatest fool. Swift.

TEMERARIOUS adj. [temerario, Fr. temerarius, Lat.]

1. Rash; heady; unreasonably adventurous; unreasonably contemptuous of danger.

Resolution without foresight is but a temerarious folly; and the consequences of things are the first point to be taken into consideration. L'Estrange.

2. Careless; heedless; done at random.

Should he find upon one single sheet of parchment an oration written full of profound sense, adorned with elegant phrase, the wit of man could not persuade him that this was done by the temerarious dashes of an unguided pen. Ray.

TEMERITY n. s. [temeritas, Lat.] Rashness; unreasonable contempt of danger.

The figures are bold even to temerity. Cowley.

To TEMPER v. a. [tempero, Lat. temperer, Fr.]

1. To mix so as that one part qualifies the other.

I shall temper to Justice with mercy, as may illustrate most Them fully satisfied, and Thos appease. Milton.

2. To compound; to form by mixture; to qualify as an ingredient.

If you could find out but a man
To bear a poison, I would temper it;
That Romeo should upon receipt thereof
Soon sleep in quiet. Shakspeare.

3. To mingle.

Prepare the sixth part of an ephah and the third part of an hin of oil, to temper with the fine flour.
Lev. xvi. 14.

The good old knight, with a mixture of the father and master of the family, tempered the inquiries after his own affairs with kind questions relating to themselves. Addison.

4. To beat together to a proper consistence.

Th' uncivil kerns of Ireland are in arms,
And temper clay with blood of Englishmen. Shakspeare.
The potter, tempering soft earth, fashioeth every vessel with much labour. Wisd. xv. 7.

5. To accommodate; to modify.

Thy sustenance, serving to the appetite of the eater, tempered itself to every man's liking.
Wisd. xvi. 21.

6. To bring to due proportion; to moderate excess.

These soft fires with kindly heat
Of various influence sument and warm, Temper or nourish. Milton.

7. To soften; to mollify; to assuage; to sooth; to calm.

Solon, in his laws to the Athenians, laboured to temper their warlike courage with sweet delights of learning and sciences: so that as much as the one excelled in arms, the other excelled in knowledge.
Spenser on Ireland.

With this the wants to temper angry love,
When all the gods he threatens with thund'ring dart.
Spenser.

Now will I to that old Andronicus,
And temper him with all the art I have. Shakspeare.
Woman! Nature made thee

To temper man: we had been brutes without you.
Orway.

8. To form metals to a proper degree of hardness.

The sword
Of Michael from the armoury of God
Was given him temper'd in, that neither keen Nor solid might resist that edge. Milton.

In the tempering of steel, by holding it but a minute or two longer or lesser in the other competent heat, gives it very different tempers as to brittleness or toughness. Boyle.

Repeated peals they hear,
And, in a heav'n serene, resplendent arms appear:
Redd'ning the skies, and glitt'ring all around,
The temper'd metals clash, and yield a silver sound.
Dryden.

9. To govern. A latinism.
With which the damned ghosts he governeth,
And furies rules, and Tartare tempt neib. Spenser.

TEMPER n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Due mixture of contrary qualities.

Nothing better proveth the excellency of this soil and temper, than the abundant growing of the palm trees. Raleigh.
Health itself is but a kind of temper, gotten and preserved by a convenient mixture of contraries. Arbutnot.

2. Middle course; mean or medium.

If the estates of some bishops were exorbitant before the reformation, the present clergy's wives reach no further than that some reasonable temper had been used, instead of pining them so quick.
Swift's Miscellanies.

3. Constitution of body.

This body would be increased daily, being supplied from above and below; and having done growing, it would become more dry by degrees, and of a temper of greater consistency and firmness.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

4. Disposition of mind.

This, I shall call it evangelical. temper is far from being natural to any corrupt child of Adam.
Hammond.

Remember with what mild
And gracious temper he both heard and judg'd, Without wrath or reviling. Milton's Paradise Lost.

This will keep their thoughts easy and free, the only temper wherein the mind is capable of receiving new informations. Locke on Education.

All irregular tempers in trade and business are but like irregular tempers in eating and drinking. Laws.

5. Constitutional frame of mind.

The brain may devise laws for the blood, but a hot temper leaps o'er a cold desire.

Our hearts.

Of brothers temper, do receive you in
With all kind love. Shakspeare's Julius Caesar.

6. Calmness of mind; moderation.

Restore yourselves unto your tempers, fathers,
And without perturbation hear me speak. B. Jon.
Teach me, like thee, in various nature wife,
To fall with dignity, with temper rise. Pope.

7. State to which metals are reduced, particularly as to hardness.

Here draw I
A sword, whose temper I intend to stain
With the best blood that I can meet withal. Shakspeare.
Ithuriel with his spear
Touch'd lightly; for he temper'd can endure
Touch of celestial temper, but returns

Of force to its own likeness: up he starts, Discover'd, and surpris'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.
These needles should have a due temper; for, if they are too hot, the force exerted to carry them through the flesh will bend them; if they are too brittle, they snap. Sharp.

TEMPERAMENT. n. f. temperamentum,
Lat. temperament, French.]

1. Constitution; state with respect to the predominance of any quality.

Bodies are innominate hot and cold, in proportion to the present temperament of that part of our body to which they are applied. Locke.

2. Medium; due mixture of opposites.

The common law has wasted and wrought out those distempers, and reduced the kingdom to its just state and temper. Hale.

TEMPERAMENTAL. adj. [from tempera- ment.] Constitutional.

That temperamental dignities, and conjecture of prevailing humours, may be collected from spots in our nails, we concede. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Intellectual representations are received with an unequal state, upon a pure temperamental relish or disgust. Glennville.

TEMPERANCE. n. f. temperantia, Lat.]

1. Moderation; opposed to gluttony and drunkenness.

Observe

The rule of not too much; by temperance taught In what thou eat'st and drink'st; seeking from thence

Due nourishment, not gluttonous delight. Milton.
Temperance, that virtue without pride, and fortune without envy, gives indulgence of body and tranquillity of mind; the best guardian of youth and support of old age. Temple.

Make temperance thy companion; so shall health Sit on thy brow. Dodley's Agriculture.

2. Patience; calmness; sedateness; moderation of passion.

His tedious speech and doted ignorance
Whe, as the noble prince had marked well,
He calm'd his wrath with goodly temperance. Spenser.
What, art you chaf'd?

Ask God for temperance, that's th' appliance only Which your disease requires. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

TEMPERATE. adj. [from temperatus, Latin.]

1. Not excessive; moderate in degree of any quality.

Use a temperate heat, for they are ever temperate heat that digest and mature; wherein we mean tem- perate, according to the nature of the subject; for that may be temperate to fruits and liquors which will not work at all upon metals. Bacon.

His sleep
Was airy, light, from pure digestion bred,
And temperate vapours bland. Milton.

2. Moderate in meat and drink.

I advis'd him to be temperate in eating and drinking. Wise man.

3. Free from ardent passion.

So hot a speed with such advice dispos'd,

pero, Latin; temperature, French.]

1. Constitution of nature; degree of any quality.

It lieth in the same climate, and is of no other temperature than Guinea.

Abbot's Description of the World.

Birds that change countries at certain seasons, if they come earlier, shew the temperature of weather.

Bacon.

There may be so much difference as to the tem- perature of the air, and as to heat and cold, in one mile, as in ten degrees of latitude; and he that would cool and refresh himself in the summer, had better go up to the top of the north hills, than remove into a far more northern country. Brown's Travels.

Memory depends upon the consistence and the temperature of the brain. Watts.

2. Mediocrity; due balance of contrarie-ties.

As the world's sun doth temper beget

Different in divers places every day;

Here autumn's temperance; there summer's heat,
Here flow'ry spring-tide, and there winter grey.

Dawkins.

* If, instead of this variation of heat, we suppose an equality or constant temperature of it before the deluge, the case would be much altered.

Woodward's Natural History.

3. Moderation; freedom from predominant passion.

In that proud port, which has so goodly grace,
Most goodly temperature you may desire. Spenser.

TEMPERED. adj. [from temper.] Disposed with regard to the passions.

When was my lord so much ungently temper'd,
To fling his ears against admonishment? Shakspeare.

TEMPEST. n. f. [from tempeste, Fr. tempestas, Latin.]

1. The utmost violence of the wind; the names by which the wind is called according to the gradual increase of its force seem to be, a breeze; a gale; a gust; a storm; a tempest.

I have seen tempests, when the scolding winds
Have riv'd the knotty oaks. Shakspeare's Julius Caesar.
Some have been driven by tempest to the south.

Abbot.

What at first was call'd a gust, the same Hath now a storm's, anon a tempest's name. Danby.

We, caught in a fiery tempest, shall be hurl'd
Each on his rock transfix'd. Milton.

With clouds and storms
Around thee thrown, tempest o'er tempest roll'd,
Thou humblest nature with thy northern blast.

Thomson.

2. Any tumult; commotion; perturbation.

The tempest in my mind
Doth from my senses take all feeling else,
Save what beats there. Shakspeare's King Lear.

TO TEMPEST. v. a. [from the noun.] To disturb as by a tempest.

Part huge of bulk,
Wallowing unwieldy, enormous in their gait,
Tempest the ocean. Milton.

TEMPEST-BEATEN. adj. [from tempest and beat.] Shattered with storms.

In the calm harbour of her gentle breast;
My tempest-beaten soul may safely rest.

Dryden's Aurengzeb.

TEMPEST-TOST. adj. [from tempest and tost.]

tries admit not such temperatures of heat.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TEMPERATURE. adj. [from temperatura, Fr.

from temper.] Stormy; turbulent.

Tempestuous fortune hath spent all her might,
And thrilling sorrow thrown his utmost dart. Spenser.
Which of them rising with the sun, or falling,
Should prove tempestuous. Milton.

Her looks grow black as a tempestuous wind,
Some raging thoughts are rowling in her mind.

Dryden.

Pompey, when dissuaded from embarking because the weather was tempestuous, replied, My voyage is necessary, my life is at stake.

Collier on the Value of Life.

TEMPLE. n. f. [from the Temple, an house near the Thames, anciently belonging to the knights templari, originally from the temple of Jerusalem.] A student in the law.

And wonder with a foolish tacit pause.

Pope's Epistles.

TEMPLE. n. f. [from temple, Fr. temple, Lat.]

1. A place appropriated to acts of religion.

The honour'd gods

Throng our large temples with the shews of peace.

Shakspeare.

Here we have no temple but the wood, no assembly but horn-beast. Shakspeare's As you like it.
Most sacrilegious murder hath broke ope
The lord's anointed temple, and stole thence
The life of th' building. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

2. [From tempera, Latin.] The upper part of the sides of the head where the pulse is felt.

Her sunny locks

Hang on her temple like a golden fleece. Shakspeare.
We may apply interclips of mastic upon the temples; frontals also may be applied.

Weyman's Surgery.

To procure sleep, he uses the scratching of the temples and ears; that even mollifies wild beasts.

Arbutnot.

The weapon enter'd close above his ear,
Cold through his temples glides the whizzing spear.

Pope.

TEMPLET. n. f. A piece of timber in a building.

When you lay any timber on brick-work, as lintels over windows, or templets under garden, lay them in loom. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

TEMPORAL. adj. [from temporal, Fr. temporalis, low Latin.]

1. Measured by time; not eternal.

As there they sustain temporal life, so here they would learn to make provision for eternal. Hooker.

2. Secular; not ecclesiastical.

This sceptre shews the force of temporal power,
The attribute to awe and majesty,
Wherein doth sit the dread of kings. Shakspeare.
All the temporal lands, which men devout
By testament have given to the church,
Would they strip from us. Shakspeare's Henry V.

All temporal power hath been wrested from the clergy, and much of their ecclesiastick. Swift.

3. Not spiritual.

There is scarce any of those decisions, but gives good light, by way of authority or reason, to some questions that arise also between temporal dignities, especially to cases wherein some of our subordinate temporal dignities have part in the controversy. Selden.

Call not every temporal end a defiling of the intention, but only when it contradicts the ends of God, or when it is principally intended: for sometimes a temporal end is part of our duty; and such are all the actions of our calling.

Taylor.

Prayer

Prayer is the instrument of fetching down all good things to us, whether spiritual or temporal.

Duty of Man.

Our petitions to God, with regard to temporal, must be that medium of convenient proportion to the several conditions of life. Rogers's Sermons.

or object.

It is not much business that distracts any man;
but the want of purity, constancy, and tendency towards God. Taylor.

Writings of this kind, if conducted with candour, have a more particular tendency to the good of their country, than any other composition. Addison's Freeholder.

We may acquaint ourselves with the powers and properties, the tendencies and inclinations, of body and spirit. Watts.

All of them are innocent, and most of them had a moral tendency, to lessen the virulence of pactices, or laugh out of countenance some vice or folly. Swift.

2. Direction or course toward any inference or result; drift.

The greater congruity or incongruity there is in any thing to the reason of mankind, and the greater tendency it hath to promote or hinder the perfection of man's nature, so much greater degrees hath it of moral good or evil; to which we ought to proposition our inclination, or aversion. Wilkins.

These opinions are of so little moment, that, like notes in the sun, their tendencies are little noticed. Locke.

TENDER. adj. [tendre, French.]

From each tender stalk the gathers. Milton.
When the frame of the lungs is not so well woven, but is lax and tender, there is great danger that, after spitting of blood, they will by degrees putrify and consume. Blackmore.

2. Sensible; easily pained; soon fore.

Unneath may she endure the flinty street,
To tread them with her tender feeling feet! Shak.

Our bodies are not naturally more tender than our faces; but, by being less exposed to the air, they become less able to endure it. L'Estrange.

The face which we are born is no less tender than any other part of the body: it is use alone hardens it, and makes it more able to endure the cold. Locke on Education.

3. Effeminate; emasculate; delicate.

When Cyrus had overcome the Lydians, that were a warlike nation, and devised to bring them to a more peaseable life, instead of their short warlike coat he clothed them in long garments, like women; and, instead of their warlike music, appointed to them certain lascivious lays, by which their minds were so mollified and abated, that they forgot their former fierceness, and became more tender and effeminate. Spenser on Ireland.

4. Exciting kind concern.

I love Valentine;
His life is tender to me as my soul. Shakespeare.

A quickness and tenderness of sight could not endure bright sunshine. Locke

Any zealots for his country, must conquer that tenderness and delicacy which may make him afraid of being spoken ill of. Addison

There are examples of wounded persons, that have roared for anguish at the discharge of ordnnance, though at a great distance; what insupportable torture then should we be under upon a like concussion in the air, when all the whole body would have the tenderness of a wound! Bentley's Sermons

3. Susceptibility of the softer passions.

Weep no more, lest I give cause
To be suspected of more tenderness
Than death become a man. Shakspeare

By the bishop of Bayon. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

Some are unworthily censured for keeping their own, whom tenderness how to get honestly teach-to spend discreetly; whereas such need no great thriftiness in preserving their own, who assume more liberty in exacting from others. Watson

True tenderness of conscience is nothing else but an awful and exact sense of the rule which should direct it; and while it steers by this compass, and is sensible of every deviation from it, so long it is properly tender. Saunders

6. Cautious care.

There being implanted in every man's nature a great tenderness of reputation; so that carelessness of it

tenet, take it, hold it, or there it goes, used by the French when they drive the ball.] A play at which a ball is driven with a racket.

The barber's man hath been seen with him, and the old ornament of his cheek hath already stuffed tennis balls.

Shakespeare.
A prince, by a hard destiny, became a tennis-ball long to the blind goddess.

Houzel's Vocal Forest.
It can be no more disgrace to a great lord to draw a fair picture, than to play at tennis with his page.

Peasam.
The inside of the eyes is blacked like the walls of a tennis court, that the rays falling upon the retina may not, by being rebounded thence upon the eyes, be returned again; for such a repercussion would make the sight more confused.

More against Atheism.
We conceive not a tennis ball to think, and consequently not to have any volition, or preference of motion to rest.

Locke.
We have no creda for the philosophers adjoining to our tennis court, but there are alchouses.

Arbutnot and Popp.

TE'NNIS. v. a. [from the noun.] To drive as a ball. Not used.

Those four garbisons issuing forth upon the enemy, will so drive him from one side to another, and tennis him amongst them, that he shall find no where safe to keep his feet in, nor hide himself.

TE'NOUR. n. f. [tenor, Lat. tenor, Fr.]

1. Continuity of state; constant mode; manner of continuity; general currency.

We might perceive his words interrupted continually with sighs, and the tenor of his speech not knit together to one constant end, but dissolved in itself, as the vehemency of the inward passion prevailed.

Sidney.

When the world first out of chaos sprang,
So smil'd the days and so the tenor ran
Of their felicity: a spring was there,
An everlasting spring the jolly year
Led round in his great circle; no winds breath
As now did smell of winter or of death.

Cassidaw.

Still I see the tenor of man's woe
Hold on the same, from woman to begin.
Does not the whole tenor of the divine law positively require humility and meekness to all men?

Spratt.

Inspire my numbers,
Till I my long laborious work complete,
And add perpetual tenor to my rhymes,
Deduced from nature's birth to Cæsar's times.

Dryden.

This success would look like chance, if it were not perpetual, and always of the same tenor.
Can it be poison! poison! of one tenor,
Or hot, or cold.

Dryden's Don Sebastian.

There is to great an uniformity amongst them, that the whole tenor of those bodies thus preserved, clearly points forth the month of May.

Woodward's Natural History.

In such lays as neither ebb nor flow,
Correctly cold, and regularly low,
That, shunning faults, one quiet tenor keep,
We cannot blame indeed—but we may sleep.

Pope.

2. Sense contained; general course or dist.

Has not the divine Apollo said,
Is 't not the tenor of his oracle,
That king Lyones shall not have an heir,
Till his tenor shall be found?

Shak. Winter's Tale.

By the stern blow and waspish action,
Which she did die as she was writing of it,
To leave an angry tenor.

Shaksp. As you like it.

When it is paid according to the tenor.
Reading it must be repeated again and again,
With a close attention to the tenor of the discourse, and a perfect neglect of the divisions into chapters and verses.

Lake.

Clarendon.

TERM. n. f. [terminus, Latin.]

1. Limit; boundary.

Corruption is a reciprocal to generation; and they two are as nature's two terms or boundaries, and the guides to life and death. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. [Terme, Fr.] The word by which a thing is expressed. A word of art.

To apply notions philosophical to plebeian terms, or to say, where the notions cannot be fully reconciled, that there wanteth a term or nomenclature for it, be but shifts of ignorance.

Bacon.

Those parts of nature into which the chaos was divided, they signified by dark and obscure names, which we have expressed in their plur and proper terms.

Barnet.

In painting, the greatest beauties cannot always be expressed for want of terms.

Dryden.

Had the Roman tongue continued vulgar, it would have been necessary, from the many terms of art required in trade and in war, to have made great additions to it.

Swift.

3. Words; language.

Would curses kill, as doth the mandrake's groan,
I would invent as bitter searching terms,
As curses, as harsh, as horrible to hear.

Shakespeare.

God to Satan first his doom apply'd,
Though in mysterious terms.

Milton.

4. Condition; stipulation.

Well, on my terms, thou wilt not be my heir?

Dryden.

Enjoy thy love, since such is thy desire;
Live, though unhappy, live on any terms.

Dryden.

Did religion bestow heaven, without any terms or conditions, indifferently upon all, there would be no insult.

Bentley.

We flattered ourselves with reducing France to our own terms by the want of money, but have been still disappointed by the great sums imported from America.

Addison.

5. [Termine, old French.] Time for which any thing lasts; a limited time.

I am thy father's spirit,
Doom'd for a certain term to walk the night.

Shak.

Why should Rome fall a moment ere her time?
No; let us draw her term of freedom out
In its full length, and spin it to the last.

Addison.

6. [In law.] The time in which the tribunals are open to all that list to complain of wrong, or to seek their right by course of law; the rest of the year is called vacation. Of these terms there are four in every year, during which matters of justice are dispatched: one is called Hilary term, which begins the twenty-third of January, or, if that be Sunday, the next day following, and ends the twenty-first of February; another is called Easter term, which begins sixteen days after Easter, and ends the Monday next after Ascension-day; the third is Trinity term, beginning the Friday next after Trinity Sunday, and ending the Wednesday fortnight after; the fourth is Michaelmas term, beginning the sixth of November, or, if that be Sunday, the next day after, and ending the twenty-eighth of November.

Corvel.

The term falters may speed their business; for the end of these sessions delivereth them space enough to overtake the beginning of the term.

Carth.

Too long vacation hasten'd on his term.

Milton.

Those men employ'd as justices daily in term time consult with one another.

Hale.

What are these to those vast heaps of crimes
Which terms prolong?

Dryden.

TO TERM. v. a. [from the noun.] To name; to call.

Men term what is beyond the limits of the universe imaginary space, as if nobody existed in it.

Locke.

TERMANANCY. n. f. [from termagant.] Turbulence; tumultuousness.

By a violent termagancy of tempers, he may never suffer him to have a moment's peace.

Burton.

TERMAGANT. adj. [cyn and magan, Saxon, eminently powerful.]

Nor have my title leaf on posts or walls,
Or in cleft sticks advanced to make calls
For termers, or some clerk-like serving-man. B. Jonson.

TERMINABLE. adj. [from terminate.] Limitable; that admits of bounds.

To TERMINATE. v. a. [termino, Lat. terminer, Fr.]

1. To bound; to limit.

Bodies that are solid, separable, terminated, and moveable, have all sorts of figures. Locke.

2. To put an end to: as, to terminate any difference.

To TERMINATE. v. n. To be limited; to end; to have an end; to attain its end.

These are to be reckoned with the heather, with whom you know we undertook not to meddle, treating only of the scripture-elect. terminated in those to whom the scripture is revealed. Hammond.

That God was the maker of this visible world, was evident from the very order of causes; the great argument by which natural reason evinces a God: it being necessary in such a chain of cause to ascend to, and terminate in, some first cause, should be the original or motion, and the cause of all other things, but itself be caused by none. South.

The wisdom of this world, its designs and efficacy, terminate on this side heaven. South.

But I the rapture of my wish renew,
I tell you then, it terminates in you. Dryden, Aureng.

TERMINATION. n. f. [from terminate.]

1. The act of limiting or bounding.

2. Bound; limit.

Its earthly and salpious parts are so exactly resolved, that its body is left imporous, and not disturbed by atomic terminations. Brown's Vulg. Err.

3. End; conclusion.

4. Last purpose.

It is not an idol ratione terminis, in respect of termination; for the religious observation thereof is retained, and subservient to the honour of God and Christ; neither is it such ratione modi, for it is kept holy by the exercise of evangelical duties. White.

5. [In grammar; terminatio, Lat. terminatio, Fr.] End of words as varied by their significations.

Those rude heaps of word and terminations of an unknown tongue, would have never been so happily learnt by heart without some smoothing artifice. Watts.

6. Word; term. Not in use.

She speaks pontic, and every word stabs: if her breath were as terrible as her terminations, there were no living near her, she would infect to the north star. Shakespeare, C.

TERMINATUS. n. f. [terminatus, Lat.] A colour.

Terminatus is of a blackish colour; it breaks, and within a day the purple comes away in a slough. Wicksman.

TERMINLESS. adj. [from term.] Unlimited; boundless.

These betraying lights look not up towards terminless joys, nor down towards endless sorrows. Raleigh.

TERMLY. adv. [from term.] Term by term; every term.

The fees or allowances that are termly given to these deputies I pretermitt.

The clerks are partly rewarded by that means also, besides that termly fee which they are allowed. Bacon.

TERNARY. adj. [ternaire, French; ternarius, Latin.] Proceeding by threes; consisting of three.

TERNARY. n. f. [ternarius, Latin; ternign, Fr.] TERNIGN. n. f. [ternign, Latin.] The number three.

These nineteen consonants stood in such confused order, some in ternaries, some in pairs, and some single. Holmes.

TERRACE. n. f. [terrace, Fr. terracina, Italian.]

1. A small mount of earth covered with grass.

He made her garden not only within the palace, but upon terraces raised with earth over the arched roofs, planted with all sorts of fruits. Temple.

But mount the terrace, thence the town survey. Dryden.

To TERRACE. v. a. [from the noun.] To open to the air or light.

The reception of light into the body of the building must now be supplied, by terracing any story which is in danger of darkness. Watts's Architecture.

Clermont's terrace'd height and Esther's groves. Temple.

TERRAQUEOUS. adj. [terra and aque, Lat.] Composed of land and water.

The terraqueous globe is, to this day, nearly in the same condition that the universal deluge left it. Woodward.

TERRENE. adj. [terrenus, Lat.] Earthly; terrestrial.

They think that the same rules of decency which serve for things done unto terrene powers, should universally decide what is fit in the service of God. Hooker.

Our terrene moon is now eclips'd,
And it portends alone the fall of Antony. Shakespeare.
God set before him a mortal and immortal life, a pa are celestial and terrene; but God gave man to himself. Raleigh.

Over many a track
Of haven they march'd, and many a province wide, Tentold the length of this terrene. Milton, Par. Lost.

TERR-BLUE. n. f. [terra and bleu, Fr.] A sort of earth.

Terr-blue is a light, loose, friable kind of lapis armenus. Woodward's Meth. Fossils.

TERRE-VERTE. n. f. [French.] A sort of earth.

Terre-verte owes its colour to a slight admixture of copper. Woodward's Meth. Fossils.
Terre-verte, or green earth, is light; it is a mean betwixt yellow-ochre and ultramarine. Dryden's Dismissal.

TERREOUS. adj. [terreus, Lat.] Earthy; consisting of earth.

There is but little similitude betwixt a terreous humidity and plantal germinations. Glenn, Scaph.
According to the temper of the terreous part at the bottom, variously begin in terreousness. Brown's Vulg. Err.

TERRESTRIAL. adj. [terrestis, Latin.]

1. Earthy; not celestial.

Far passing the height of men terrestrial,
Like a huge giant of the Tiber race. Spenser.
Terrestrial heav'n I don't regard by other heav'n as
That time, yet bear their bright delicious lamps, Light above light. Milton.
Thou brought'st terrestrial with his hundred hands.

So call'd in heav'n; but mortal men below
By his terrestrial name terrestrial know. Dryden.

2. Consisting of earth; terrene. Improper.

I did not confine these observations to land, or terrestrial parts of the globe, but extended them to the fluids. Woodward.

To TERRASTRIFY. v. a. [terrestis and facio, Latin.] To reduce to the state of earth.

Though we should affirm, that heaven were but earth celestified, and earth but heaven terrestified; or, that each part above had an influence on its divided affinity below; yet to single out these relations is a work to be effected by revelation. Brown's Vulg. Err.

TERRESTRIOUS. adj. [terrestis, Lat. terrestre, Fr.] Terrene; earthy; consisting of earth.

This variation proceedeth from terrestrious eminences of earth respecting the needle. Brown.

TERRIBLE. adj. [terribilis, Fr. from terribilis, Lat.]

1. Dreadful; formidable; causing fear.

Was this a face to be expos'd
In the most terrible and nimble stroke
Of quick, cross lightning? Shakespeare, King Lear.
Fit love for gods,
Not terrible, though terror be in love. Milton.

Thy native Latium was thy darling care,
Prudent in peace, and terrible in war. Prior.

2. Great so as to offend: a colloquial hyperbole.

Being indispell'd by the terrible coldness of the season, he reposed himself till the weather should mend. Clarendon.

King James's canons require that the bishops procure a terrier to be taken of such lands. Ayliffe.

3. [From terre, Lat.] A wimble; auger or borer. Ainsworth.

TERRIFIC. adj. [terrificus, Lat.] Dreadful; causing terror.

The serpent, subtlest beast of all the field,
Of huge extent sometimes, with brazen eyes
And heavy mune terrific. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The British navy through ocean vast Shall move her double cross, & extreme climes Terror. Philips.

To TERRIFY. v. a. [terror and facio, Latin.]

Latin.] To fight; to shock with fear; to make afraid.

Thou scared me with dreams, and terrified me through visions.
In nothing terrified by your adversaries.

Neither doth it beseem this most wealthy state to be terrified from that which is right which any charges of war.

Though he was an offender against the laws, yet in regard they had treated him illegally, in scourging him and Silas uncondemned, against the privilege of Romans, he terrified them with their illegal proceedings.

The amazing difficulty of his account will rather terrify than inform him, and keep him from setting hearty about such a task as he despairs ever to go through with.

Meteors for various purposes to form;
The breeze to cheer; to terrify, the storm.

TERRITORY. n. f. [territorium, law Latin; territoire, French.] Land; country; dominion; district.

Linger not in my territories longer than swiftest expedition will give thee time to leave our royal court.

They erected a house within their own territory, half-way between their fort and the town.

He saw wide territory spread Before him, towns and rural works between.

Ne'er did the Turk invade our territory,
But fame and terror doubled still their files.
Arts and sciences took their rise, and flourished only in those small territories where the people were free.

TERROR. n. f. [terror, Latin; terreur, French.]

1. Fear communicated.

The thunder when to roll
With terror through the dark aerial hall.
The pleasures of the land and terrors of the main.

2. Fear received.

It is the cowardly terror of his spirit
That dares not undertake.
They shot through both the walls of the town and the bulwark also, to the great terror of the defendants.
Amaze and terror seiz'd the rebel host.
They with conscious terrors vex me round.

O fight:
Of terror, foul and ugly to behold,
Horrid to think, how horrible to feel!

3. The cause of fear.

Those enormous terrors of the Nile.
So spake the grieved terror.

TERSE. adj. [ters, Fr. tersus, Lat.]

1. Smooth. Not in use.

Many stones precious and vulgar, although terse and smooth, have not this power attractive.

2. Cleanly written; neat; elegant without pompousness.

To raw numbers and unfinished verse,
Sweet found is added now to make it terse.
These accomplishments in the pulpit appear by a quaint, terse, florid style, rounded into periods without propriety or meaning.
Various of numbers, new in every strain;
Diffus'd, yet terse, poetical, though plain.

TERTIAN. n. f. [tertiana, Latin.] Is an ague intermitting but one day, so that there are two fits in three days.

Tertian of a long continuance do most menace this symptom.

TO TESTATE. v. a. [testo, tertius, Lat.] To do any thing the third time.

TEST. n. f. [test, Fr. testa, Italian.]

1. The capel by which refiners try their metals.

2. Trial; examination: as by the capel.

All thy vexations
Were but my trials of thy love, and thou Hast strangely stood the test.
Let there be some more test made of my metal,
Before so noble and so great a figure
Be stamp'd upon it.
They who thought worth of the Scors, did not think there would be no fruit or discovery from that test.

What use of oaths, of promise, or of test,
Where men regard no God but interest?
Thy virtue, prince, has stood the test of fortune
Like purest gold, that's tortur'd in the furnace;
Comes out more bright, and brings forth all its weight.

3. Means of trial.

Whom should my muse then fly to, but the best
Of kings for grace; of poets, for my test?

To be read herself she need not fear;
Each test, and every light, her muse will bear.

Your noble rage
We banish not, but they forsake the place:
Our doors are open: True; but, ere they come,
You test your censuring test, and fume the room.

4. That with which any thing is compared in order to prove its genuineness.

Unseiting Nature, still divinely bright,
One clear, unchang'd and universal light,
Life, force, and beauty, must to all impart,
At once the fount, and end, and test of art.

5. Discriminative characteristic.

Our penal laws no sons of yours admit,
On test excludes your tribe from benefit.

6. Judgment; distinction.

Who would excel, when few can make a test
Bewraying indifferently writing and the best?

TESTACEOUS. adj. [testaceus, Lat. testaceus, French.]

1. Consisting of shells; composed of shells.

2. Having continuous, not jointed shells; opposed to crustaceous.

Testaceous, with naturalists, is a term given only to such fish whose strong and thick shells are entire, and of a piece; because those which are jointed, as the lobsters, are crustaceous; but in medicine, all preparations of shells, and substances of the like kind, are thus called.

Several shells were found upon the shores, of the crustaceous and testaceous kind.

The mineral particles in these shells are plainly to be distinguished from the testaceous ones, or the texture and substance of the shell.

TESTAMENT. n. f. [testament, Fr. testamentum, Lat.]

1. A will; any writing directing the disposal of the possessions of a man deceased.

He bringeth arguments from the love which always the testator bore him, imagining that these, or the like proofs will convict a testament to have that in it which other men can no where by reading find.

All the temporal lands, which men devout
By testament have given to the church,
Would they strip from us.

He outlived by his last testament, that his Acquiesce should be burnt.

2. The name of each of the volumes of the holy scripture.

TESTAMENTARY. adj. [testamentarius, Fr. testamentarius, Latin.] Given by will; contained in wills.

How many inflammatory charities have been destroyed by the negligence or fraud of executors; by the suppression of a will; the subornation of witnesses, or the corrupt sentence of a judge!

Not with fond shekels of the tested gold.

TESTER. n. f. [teste, French, a head;] this coin probably being distinguished by the head stamped upon it.]

1. A sixpence.

Come manage me your calivers hold, there is a tester for thee.

A crown goes for sixty pence, a shilling for twelve pence, and a tester for sixpence.

Those who bore bulwarks on their backs,
And guarded nations from attacks,
Now practise every pliant gesture,
Opening their trunk for every tester.

Young man, your days can ne'er be long
In flow'rs of age you perish for a song;
Plum and directors, Shylock and his wife,
Will club their testers now to take thy life.

2. The cover of a bed.

TESTICLE. n. f. [testiculus, Lat.] Stone.
That a beaver, to escape the hunter, bites off his testicles or stones, is a tenet very ancient.

The more certain sign from the pains reaching to the groins and testicles.

TESTIFICATION. n. f. [testificatio, Lat. from testify.] The act of witnessing.

When together we have all received those heavenly mysteries wherein Christ imparteth himself unto us, and giveth visible testification of our blessed communion with him, we should, in hatred of all heresies, factions, and schisms, declare openly ourselves united.

In places solemnly dedicated for that purpose, is a more direct service and testification of our homage to God.

TESTIFICATOR. n. f. [from testificator, Latin.] One who witnesses.

TESTIFIER. n. f. [from testify.] One who testifies.

TO TESTIFY. v. n. [testificor, Lat.] To witness; to prove; to give evidence.

Jesus needed not that any should testify of man; for he knew what was in man.

One witness shall not testify against any, to cause him to die.

Heaven and earth shall testify for us, that you put us to death wrongfully.

The event was dire,
As this place testifies.

She appeals to their closets, to their books of devotion, to testify what care she has taken to establish her children in a life of solid piety and devotion.

TO TESTIFY. v. a. To witness; to give evidence of any point.

We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen; and ye receive not our witness.

Mortimer.

TEXT. n. f. [textus, Fr. textus, Lat.]

1. That on which a comment is written.

We expect your next

Should be no comment but a text,
To tell how modern beasts are vex'd.

Waller.

2. A sentence of scripture.

In religion

What error, but some sober brow will bless it, and approve it with a text?

Shakespeare.

Some prime articles of faith are not delivered in a literal or catechetical form of speech, but are collected and concluded by argumentation out of sentences of scripture, and by comparing of sundry texts with one another.

White.

His mind he should fortify with some few texts, which are home and apposite to his case.

Saunders.

TEXTILE. adj. [textilis, Latin.] Woven; capable of being woven.

The placing of the tangible parts in length or transverse, as in the warp and woof of textiles.

Bacon's Natural History.

The materials of them were not from any herb, as other textiles, but from a stone called amiantus.

Wilkins.

TEXTMAN. n. f. [text and man.] A man ready in quotation of texts.

Men's daily occupations require the doing of a thousand things, which it would puzzle the best textman readily to bethink himself of a sentence in the Bible, clear enough to satisfy a scrupulous conscience of the lawfulness of.

Saunders.

TEXT'RING. adj. [texturing, Lat.] Relating to weaving.

It is a wonderful artifice, how newly-hatched maggots, not the parent animal, because the emits no web, nor hath any texturing art, can convolve the stubborn leaf, and bind it with the thread it weaves from its body.

Derham.

TEXT'UARI'. } n. f. [textuaire, Fr. from

TEXT'UARY. } text.] One ready in the text of scripture; a divine well versed in scripture.

1. Contained in the text.
He extends the exclusion unto twenty days, which in the textuary sense is fully accomplished in one.

Brown.

2. Serving as a text; authoritative.

I see no ground why his reason should be textuary to ours, or that God intended him an universal headship.

Glanville.

TEXT'URE. n. f. [textus, Lat.]

1. The act of weaving.

Skins, although a natural habit unto all before the invention of texture, were something more unto Adam.

Brown.

2. A web; a thing woven.

Others, say in the grassy dale,

Their humble texture weave.

Thomson's Spring.

3. Manner of weaving with respect either to form or matter.

A veil of richest texture wrought she wears.

Pope.

4. Disposition of the parts of bodies; combination of parts.

Spallanzani.

Nor in their liquid texture mortal wound
Receive, no more than can the fluid air.

Milton.

While the particles continue entire, they may compose bodies of the same nature and texture now, with water and earth composed of entire particles in the beginning.

Newton.

THAN. adv. [thanne, Saxon.] A particle placed in comparison after the comparative adjective or adverb, noting a less degree of the quality compared in the word that follows: than: as, Monarchy is better than anarchy. The hawk flies more swiftly than the pigeon.

Were we not better to fall once with virtue,
Than draw a wretched and dishonour'd breath?

Ben Jonson.

More true delight in that small ground,
Than in possessing all the earth was found.

Daniel.

I never met with a more unhappy conjuncture of affairs, than in the business of that unfortunate earl.

King Charles.

I love

I love you for nothing more than for the just claim you have for all the sons of Adam. Swift THANKS. n. f. [Saxon, Saxon.] An old title of honour, perhaps equivalent to baron.
 By Sine's death I know I am the son of Glamis;
 But how of Cawdor? the thane of Cawdor lives. Shakespeare.

TO THANK. v. a. [Sancian, Saxon; danc-ken, Dutch; thanken, German.]

1. To return acknowledgments for any favour or kindness.

The forlorn soldier, that so nobly fought,
 He would have well become this place, and grac'd
 The thanks of a king. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
 For your stubborn answer

The king shall know it, and, no doubt, thank you.
Shakespeare.

We thank God always for you. a Theb. i. 3.

He was so true a father of his country,
 To thank me for defending ev'n his foes,
 Because they were his subjects. Dryd. Span. Friar.

2. It is used often in a contrary or ironical sense.

Ill fare our ancestor impure!

For this we may thank Adam. Milton.

Weigh the danger with the doubtful bliss,
 And thank yourself, if aught thou'd fall amiss.

Dryden.

That Portugal hath yet no more than a suspension of arms, they may thank themselves, because they came so late into the treaty; and, that they came so late, they may thank the Whigs, whole false representations they believed. Swift.

THANK. } n. f. [Sancan, Saxon; dancke,
THANKS. } Dut. Acknowledgment paid for favour or kindness; expression of gratitude. Thanks is commonly used of verbal acknowledgment, gratitude of real repayment. It is seldom used in the singular.

The poorest service is repaid with thanks. Shak.
 Happy be Thelus, our renowned duke.

—Thanks, good Egur, what's the news? Shak.

The fool saith, I have no thank for all my good deed; and they that eat my bread speak evil of me.

Eccles. xx. 16.

He took bread, and gave thanks to God in presence of them all. Acts, xxvii. 35.

Thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory.

1 Corin. xv.

Some embrace suits which never mean to deal effectually in them; but they will win a thank, or take a reward. Bacon.

For this to th' infinitely good we owe Immortal thanks. Milton.

THANKFUL. adj. [Sancful, Saxon.] Full of gratitude; ready to acknowledge good received.

A thankful remembrance of his death.

Common Prayer.

Be thankful unto him, and bless his name.

Psal. c. 4.

In favour, to use men with much difference is good; for it maketh the persons preferred more thankful, and the rest more officious. Bacon's Eff.

Live, thou great encourager of arts;

Live ever in our thankful hearts. Dryden.

THANKFULLY. adv. [from thankful.]
 With lively and grateful sense of good received.

Here is better than the open air; take it thankfully. Shakespeare.

If you have liv'd, take thankfully the past;

Make, as you can, the sweet remembrance last.

Dryden.

Out of gold, how to draw as many distinct substances as I can separate from vitriol, I shall very thankfully learn. Boyle.

THANKFULNESS. n. f. [from thankful.] Gratitude; lively sense or ready acknowledgment of good received.

VOL. II.

He scarcely would give me thanks for what I had done; for fear that thankfulness might have an introduction of reward. Sidney.

Will you give me this maid your daughter?

—As freely, son, as God did give her me.

—Sweet prince, you learn me noble thankfulness.

Shakespeare.

The celebration of these holy mysteries being ended, retire with all thankfulness of heart for having been admitted to that heavenly feast. Taylor.

Thankfulness and submission make us happy.

L'Estrange.

THANKLESS. adj. [from thank.]

1. Unthankful; ungrateful; making no acknowledgment.

Left to great good as he for her had wrought,
 Should die unknown, and buried be in thankless thought. Spenser.

That she may feel

How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is,

To have a thankless child. Shakespeare's King Lear.

One grateful woman to thy fame supply'd

What a whole thankless land to his deny'd. Pope.

2. Not deserving, or not likely to gain thanks.

The contracting and extending the lines and sense of others, if the first authors might speak for themselves, would appear a thankless office. Warton.

Wage still their wars,

And bring home on thy breast more thankless
 fears. Croft.

THANKLESSNESS. n. f. [from thankless.]

Ingratitude; failure to acknowledge good received.

Not to have written then, seems little less

Than worst of civil vices, thanklessness. Dunne.

THANKOFFERING. n. f. [thank and offering.] Offering paid in acknowledgment of mercy.

A thousand thankofferings are due to that providence which has delivered our nation from these absurd iniquities. Watts.

THANKSGIVING. n. f. [thanks and give.]

Celebration of mercy.

These sacred hymns Christianity hath peculiar to itself, the other being songs too of praise and thanksgiving, wherewith as we serve God, so the Jews likewise. Hooker.

Of old there were songs of praise and thanksgiving

unto God. Nehemiah, xii. 46.

We should acknowledge our obligations to God for the many favours we receive, by continual praises and thanksgiving. Tillotson.

The common practice of all Christian churches and states, in appointing and keeping days of public

thanksgiving and humiliation, is argument sufficient to prove, that in the common sense of Christians

it is not forbidden in scripture. Nelson.

THANKWORTHY. adj. [thank and worthy.] Deserving gratitude; meritorious.

This is thankworthy, if a man endure grief.

1 Pet. ii. 19.

If love be compell'd, and cannot chafe,

How can it grateful or thankworthy prove? Davies.

THARM. n. f. [Searum, Saxon; darm, Dutch, the gut.] Intestines twisted for several uses.

THAT. pronoun. [thata, Gothick; ðæt, Saxon; dat, Dutch.]

1. Not this, but the other.

He wins me by that means I told you, Shakep.

Octavia, not only that,

That were excusable, that and thousands more

Of semblable import, but he hath wag'd

New wars against Pompey. Shakespeare.

2. Which; relating to an antecedent thing.

The sinner makes an aberration from the scope or mark that is set before him. Parkin.

You'll rue the time

That clogs me with this answer. Stat. Ann. beth.

Nothing they but dust can show,

Or bones that hasten to be so. Cowley.

When there is no such evident certainty as to take away all kind of doubting; in such cases, a judgment that is equal and impartial must incline to the greater probability. Wilkins.

3. Who; relating to an antecedent person.
 Saints that taught and led the way to heaven.

4. It sometimes serves to save the repetition of a word or words foregoing.

I'll know your business, that I will.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

They said, What is that to us? fear thou to that.

Matthew.

Ye defraud, and that your brethren. 1 Cor. vi. 8.

Yet for all that, when they be in the land of their enemies I will not cast them away.

Leviticus, xxvii. 44.

We must direct our prayers to right ends; and that either in respect of the prayer itself, or the things we pray for. Duty of Man.

They weep, as if they meant

That way at least proud Nabas to prevent. Cowley.

This runic subject will occur upon that of poetry. Temple.

What is inviting in this sort of poetry, proceeds not so much from the idea of a country life itself, as from that of its tranquillity. Pope.

5. Opposed to this, as the other to one.

This is not fair; nor profitable that;

Nor t' other question proper for debate.

Dryden's Persius.

6. When this and that relate to foregoing words, this is referred like hic or cuius to the latter, and that like ille or celo to the former.

In this scale gold, in t' other fame does lie,

The weight of that mounts this so high. Cowley.

7. Such as.

By religion is meant a living up to those principles, that is, to act conformably to our best reason, and to live as becomes those who believe a

God and a future state. Tillotson.

8. That which; what.

Sir, I think the meat wants that I have,

—Baking. Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors.

9. The thing.

The Nazarene hath vowed, besides that that his hand shall get. Numbers, vi. 21.

He made that art which was a rage. Cowley.

10. The thing which then was.

Secure proud Nabas slept,

And dreamt, vain man, of that day's bar'rous sport. Cowley.

11. By way of eminence.

'Tis that Jonathan, the joy and grace,

That Jonathan, in whom does mixt remain.

All that fond mothers wish. Cowley.

Hence love himself, that tyrant of my days.

Cowley.

12. In THAT. Because; in consequence of.

Things are preached not in that they are taught,

but in that they are published. Hooker.

THAT. conjunction.

1. Because.

It is not that I love you less

Than when before your feet I lay;

But to prevent the sad increase

Of hopeless love, I keep away. Waller.

Forgive me that I thus your patience wrong.

Cowley.

2. Noting a consequence.

That he should dare to do me this disgrace!

Is fool or coward writ upon my face? Dryden.

The custom and familiarity of these tongues do sometimes so far influence the expressions in these epistles, that one may observe the force of the Hebrew conjugations. Locke.

3. Noting indication.

We answered, that we held it so agreeable; as we both forgot danger's past and fears to come; Stat.

THA

THE

we thought an hour spent with him was worth years of our former life. Bacon's New Atlantis.
In the midst of this darkness they saw so much light, as to believe that when they died they went immediately to the "ars." Heylyn.
I have shewed before, that a mere possibility to the contrary can be no means hinder a thing from being highly cred. Wilkins.

4. Noting a final end.

Treat it kindly, that it may
With at least with us to stay. Cowley.

THATCH. n. f. [Dace, Saxon, Araw, Skin- ner, from Dac, a roof; in Islandick, thak, Mr. Lye.] Straw laid upon the top of a house to keep out the weather.

Had by a flye, beneath a roof of thatch,
Dwelt Obloquy, who in her early days
Baskets of fish at Billingsgate did watch,
Cod, whiting, oyster, mackerel, sprat, or plaice. Pope.

A plough-boy, who has never seen any thing but thatched houses, naturally imagines that thatch belong to the very nature of a house. Watts.

Then came rosy Health from her cottage of thatch,
Where never physician had lifted the latch. Smart.

TO THATCH. v. a. [Daccian, Saxon.] To cover as with straw.

Make little hairs, and thatch
Your poor thin roofs with burthens of the dead. Shakespeare.

Moss groweth chiefly upon ridges of houses tiled or thatched. Bacon's Natural History.
Then Rome was poor, and there you might behold

The palace thatched with straw. Dryden.

Spannets or elegies to Chloris
Might raise a house above two stories;
A lyric ode would state, a catch
Would tile, an epigram would thatch. Swift.

THATCHER. n. f. [from thatch.] One whose trade is to cover houses with straw.

You merit new employments daily;
Our thatcher, ditcher, gardener, bailly. Swift.
All is universal timber; it serves the soldier, seaman, carpenter, thatcher, and husbandman. Mortimer.

TO THAW. v. n. [Japan, Saxon; degen,
Dutch.]

1. To grow liquid after congelation; to melt.

When thy melted maid
His letter at thy pillow hath laid;
If thou begin'st to thaw for this,
May my name step in. Dennis.

It on firm land

Thaws not, but gather heap, and ruin seems
Of ancient pile, all else deep fog and ice. Milt.
Having let that ice thaw of itself, and frozen the liquor a second time, we could not discern any thing. Boyle.

O Solitude! romantick maid,
Whether by nodding tow'rs you tread,
Or climb the Andes' clifted side,
Or by the Nile's coy source abide,
Or, starting from a half year's sleep,
From Hecia view the thawing deep,
Or Tadmor's marble wastes survey,
Or in yon rossiess cloister play;
Thee, fond nymph! again I woo,
And again thy steps pursue. Granger.

2. To remit the cold which had caused frost.

TO THAW. v. n. To melt what was con-gealed.

Bring me the fairest creature northward born,
Where Phœbus' fire scarce thaws the ices. Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

Think not that Cæsar bears such rebel blood,
That will be thaw'd from the true quality
With that which melteth fools.

Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

My love is thaw'd,
Which, like a waven image, paint a fire,
Beats no impression of the thing it was. Shakespeare.

She can unlock

The claspings chaps, and thaw the numbing spell. Milton.

Burnish'd steel, that cast a glare
From far, and form'd to thaw the freezing air. Dryden.

Her icy heart is thaw'd. Graville.

THAW. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Liquefaction of any thing congealed.

A man of my kidney, that am as subject to heat as butter; a man of continual dissolution and thaw. Shakespeare.

Harden his stubborn heart, but still as ice
More harden'd after thaw. Milton.

2. Warmth such as liquifies congelation.

I was the prince's jester, and duller than a great thaw. Shakespeare's Much do about Nothing.

That cold country where discourse doth freeze in the air all winter, and may be heard in the next summer, or at a great thaw. Wilkins's Math. Mag.

When sharp frosts had long constrain'd the earth,
A kindly thaw unlocks it with cold rains,
First the tender blade peeps. Dryden.

THZ, article. [de, Dutch.]

1. The article noting a particular thing.

Your son has paid a soldier's debt;
He only liv'd but till he was a man;
The which no sooner had his prowess confirm'd,
In the unshrinking station where he fought,

But like a man he dy'd. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He put him in mind of the long pretence he had to be groom of the bed-chamber, for the which he would not chuse but say, that he had the queen's promise. Clarendon.

Unhappy slave, and pupil to a hell,
Unhappy till the last, the kind releasing knell. Cowley.

I'll march the muses, Hannibah
The fair example of the heav'nly lack,
Thy fellow poet, Cowley, mark;
Above the stars let thy bold quipick sound,
Thy humble nest build on the ground. Cowley.

The fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world. Milton.

Night shades the groves, and all in silence lie,
All but the mournful Philomel and I. Pope.

2. Before a vowel e is commonly cut off in verse.

Who had th' especial engines been to rear
His fortunes up into the state they were. Daniel.

Th' adorning thee with so much art
Is but a bar'rous skill;
'Tis like the poisoning of a dart,
Too apt before to kill. Cowley.

3. Sometimes be is cut off.

In this scale gold, in r other fame does lie. Cowley.

4. It is used by way of consequential reference.

The longer sin hath kept possession of the heart,
th' harder it will be to drive it out. Duty of Man.

5. In the following passage th' is used according to the French idiom:

As all the considerable governments among the Alps are commonwealths, so it is a constitution the most adapted of any to the poverty of these countries. Addison on Italy.

THEATRICAL. adj. [theatral, Fr. theatralis,
Lat.] Belonging to a theatre.

THEATRE. n. f. [theatre, Fr. theatrum,
Lat.]

1. A place in which shews are exhibited;
a playhouse.

This wise and universal theatre
Presents more woful pageants than the scene
Wherein we play. Shakespeare's As you like it.

When the boats came within sixty yards of the pillar, they found themselves all broad, yet so as they might go about, so as they all stood as in a theatre beholding this light. Bacon.

2. A place rising by steps or gradations like a theatre.

Shade above shade, a woody theatre
Of stateliest view. Milton.

In the midst of this fair valley stood
A native theatre, which, rising slow,
By just degrees o'erlook'd the ground below. Dry.

No theatres of oaks around him rise, Whose roots each's centre touch, whose heads the skies. Horat.

THEATRICAL. adj. [theatrum, Latin.]

THEATRICK. adj. Scenick; *suting a theatre; pertaining to a theatre.

Theatrical forms stickle hard for the prize of religion: a distorted countenance is made the mark of an upright heart. Detay of Pity.

Load some vain church with old theatrical state,
Turn arcs of triumph to a garden gate. Pope.

THEATRICALY. adv. [from theatrical.]

In a manner suiting the stage.

Dauntless her look, her gesture proud,
Her voice theatrically loud. Pope.

THEE, the oblique singular of thou.

Poet and saint, to thee alone were giv'n
The two most sacred names of earth and heav'n. Cowley.

THEFT. n. f. [from thief.]

1. The act of stealing.

Theft is an unlawful felonious taking away of another man's goods against the owner's knowledge or will. Cowley.

His thefts were too open; his filching was like an unskilful finger, he kept not time. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

Their nurse Euriphile, Whom for the theft I wedded, stole these children. Shakespeare.

Decent in trade, a secret theft; extortion, an impudent theft. Holyday.

The thefts upon the public can be looked into and punished. Dowdant.

2. The thing stolen.

If the theft be certainly found in his hand alive, whether ox, ass, or sheep, he shall restore double. Exodus, xxii. 4.

THEIR. pronoun. [Deona, of them, Saxon.]

1. Of them: the pronoun possessive, from
they.

The round world should have shook Lions into civil streets, and citizens into their dens. Shakespeare.

For the Italians, Dante had begun to file their language in verse before Boccace, who likewise received no little help from his master Petrarch; but the reformation of their prose was wholly owing to Boccace. Dryden.

2. Theirs is used when any thing comes in construction between the possessive and substantive.

Prayer we always have in our power to bestow,
and they never in theirs to refuse. Hooker.

They gave the same names to their own idols which the Egyptians did to theirs. Raleigh.

The penalty to thy transgression due,
And due to theirs, which out of thine will grow. Milton.

Nothing but the name of seal appears Twixt our best actions and the worth of theirs. Danbarn.

Vain are our neighbours hopes, and vain their cares;
The fault is more their language's than theirs. Rojecommon.

Which established law of theirs seems too strict at first, because it excludes all secret intrigues. Dryden.

And, reading, with like theirs our fate and fame. Pope.

THEM, the oblique of they.

The materials of them were not from any herb. Wilkins.

THEMS.

THESE. n. f. [thème, Fr. from thema.]

1. A subject on which one speaks or writes.

Every object of our idea is called a thème, whether it be a being or not being. Watts.

Two truths are told,

As happy prologues to the swelling act
Of the imperial thème. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

When a soldier was the thème, my name
Was not far off. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

O! could I flow like thee, and make thy stream
My great example, as it is my thème!

Though deep, yet clear; though gentle, yet not dull;
Strong without rage, without o'erflowing full.

Denham.

Whatever near Eurota's happy stream,
With laurels crown'd, had been Apollo's thème.

Roscommon.

Though Tyber's streams immortal Rome behold,
Though foaming Hermus swells with tides of gold;
From heav'n itself, though seven-fold Nilus flows,
And harvests on a hundred realms bestows;
These now no more shall be the muse's thèmes,
Lost in my fame, as in the sea their streams. Pope.

2. Afterwards; immediately afterwards; soon afterwards.

If an herb be cut off from the roots in winter, and then the earth be trodden down hard, the roots will become very big in summer. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

3. In that case; in consequence.

If God's immediate speaking and writing argueth precepts, thus spoken or written, to be perpetually moral; then his not writing of precepts argueth them to be temporary. White.

Had not men been fated to be blind,
Then had our lances pierc'd the treach'rous wood. Dryden.

Had fate so pleas'd I had been eldest born,
And then without a crime the crown had worn. Dryden.

If all this be so, then man has a natural freedom. Locke.

4. Therefore; for this reason.

While then the apostle moves us to unity, and moves us also to an endeavour to it, he bestows upon us as well a discovery, as an exhortation, shewing us not only the end, but also the means. Holyday.

If then his providence
Out of our evil seek to bring forth good. Milton.

Now then be all thy weighty cares away,
Thy jealousies and fears; and, while you may,
To peace and soft repose give all the day. Dryden.

5. At another time: as now and then, at one time and other.

Now shaver with level wing the deep, then hoar. Milton.

One while the master is not aware of what is done, and then in other cases it may fall out to be his own act. LeStrange.

THEORICAL. } adj. { theoriques, Fr.
THEORICK. } { from theoria. }

Speculative; depending on theory or speculation; termination in theory or speculation; not practical.

When he speaks,
 The air, a chartered libertine, is still;
 And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
 To steal his sweet and honied sentences.
 So that the art and practick part of life
 Must be the mistress to this theorique. Shakespeare.

The theoretical part of the inquiry being interwoven with the historical conjectures, the philosophy of colours will be promoted by indisputable experiment.

For theoretical learning and sciences, there is nothing yet complete.

Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

'THEORETICALLY. } { [from theoretick.]
THEORICAL- } adv. { [from theorick.]
LY. }

Speculatively; not practically.
THEORICK. n. f. [from the adjective.]
 Speculation, not practice.

The bookish theorick,
 Whereto the tog'd confils can propose
 As masterly as he, meer prattle without practice
 Is all his soldiership. Shakespeare's Othello.

THEORIST. n. f. [from theory.] A speculatist; one given to speculation.

The greatest theorists have given the preference to such a government as that which obtains in this kingdom.

THEORY. n. f. [theoria, Fr. theoria.]
 Speculation; not practice; scheme; plan or system yet subsisting only in the mind.

If they had been themselves to execute their own theory in this church, they would have seen, being nearer.

In making gold, the means hitherto propounded to effect it are in the practice full of error, and in the theory full of unsound imagination.

Bacon's Natural History.

Practice alone divides the world into virtuous and vicious; but as to the theory and speculation of virtue and vice, mankind are much the same.

South's Sermons.

True christianity depends on fact:
 Religion is not theory, but act.

Harte.

Watts.

THERE. adv. [thar, Gothick; þær, Sax. daer, Dutch; der, Danish.]

1. In that place

If they come to thou at my house,
 I'll not be there. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Exil'd by thee from earth to deepest hell,
 In brassen bonds, with barrous discord dwell;
 Gigantick rage, pale terror, gloomy care,
 And mad ambition shall attend her there. Pope.

2. It is opposed to here.

To see thee fight, to see thee travell, to see thee
 In thee thee there. Shak. M. Wives of Windsor.

And their relishes be as different there as they Are, yet the manna in heaven will suit every Taste. Locke.

Darkest then might well from twilight here.

Milton.

3. An exclamation directing something at a distance.

Your fury hardens me.

A guard there; fence here. Dryden's Aurengzeib.

4. It is used at the beginning of a sentence with the appearance of a nominative case, but serves only to throw the nominative behind the verb: as, a man came, or there came a man. It adds however some emphasis, which, like many other idioms in every language, must be learned by custom, and can hardly be explained. It cannot always be omitted without harshness: as, in old times there was a great king.

For reformation of error there were that thought it a part of christian charity to instruct them.

Hooker.

There are delivered in holy scripture many weighty arguments for this doctrine.

White.

There cannot in nature be a strength so great, as to make the least moveable to pass in an instant, or all together, through the least place.

Dryden in the Soul.

There have been that have delivered themselves from their ill by their good fortune or virtue.

Suckling.

In human actions there are no degrees described, but a latitude is indulged.

 The giver.

Milton.

THEREAT. adv. [there and at.]

1. At that; on that account.

Every error is a stain to the beauty of nature; for which cause it blusheth thereat, but glorieth in the contrary.

Hooker.

2. At that place.

Wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many go in thereat.

Mat. vii. 13.

THEREBY. adv. [there and by.] By that; by means of that; in consequence of that.

Some parts of the theory taught in the reading of the word of God, and the proclamation of his laws, that the people may thereby learn what their duties are towards him.

Hooker.

Therewith thereby he forc'd him to unite
 One of his grudging feet, him to defend thereby.

Speiser.

Being come to the height, they were thereby brought to an absolute necessity.

Darwin on Ireland.

Dare to be true; nothing can seduce a lie:
 A fault which needs it most grows true thereby.

Herbert.

If the paper be placed beyond the focus, and then the red colour at the lens be alternately intercepted and let pass, the violet on the paper will not suffer any change thereby.

Newton.

THEREFORE. adv. [there and for.]

1. For that; for this; for this reason.

This is the latest party we will admit;
Therefore to our best mercy give yourselves.

Shak.

Falstaff is dead,
 And we must yern therefore.

Shakespeare's Henry V.

The herd that seeks after sensual pleasure is lust and unmanly; and therefore I compose myself to meet a storm.

Lutet.

2. Consequently.

He blushes; therefore is guilty.

 That tow'd and cask'd under her breast did cower.

Speiser.

THEREUPON.

THENCE. adv. [from thence, or thenceforth.] To that.

It is in regard then of thence only that, apprehending the gospel of Christ, we yield thence our unfeigned assent as to a thing infallibly true?

This sort of base people doth not for the most part rebel of themselves, having no heart thence, but are by force drawn by the grand rebels into their action.

Next thence did grow a goodly tale, That whereby we reason, live and be.

Within ourselves, we strangers are thence. A larger form of speech were safer than that which punctually prefixeth a constant day thence.

What might his force have done, being brought thence.

When that already gave so much to do? That it is the appointment of God, might be argument enough to persuade us thence.

THEREUNDER. adv. [there and under.] Under that.

Those which come nearer unto reason, find paradise under the equinoctial line; judging that thereunder might be found most pleasure and the greatest fertility.

THEREUPON. adv. [there and upon.] 1. Upon that; in consequence of that.

Grace having not in one thing shewed itself, nor for some few days, but in such sort to long continued, our manifold sins striving to the contrary, what can we less thereupon conclude than that God would at least-wise, by tract of time, teach the world, that the thing which he blest cannot, but be of him?

He hopes to find you forward, And thereupon he sends you this good news. Let that one article rank with the rest; And thereupon give me your daughter.

Though grants of extraordinary liberties made by a king to his subjects do no more diminish his greatness than when one torch lighteth another, yet many times inconveniences do arise thereupon.

Children are chid for having failed in good manner, and have thereupon reproofs and piecemeal heap'd upon them.

Solon finding the people engaged in two violent factions, of the poor and the rich, and in great confusion thereupon, made due provisions for settling the balance of power.

1. The thickest part, or time when any thing is thickest.

Achimenes having with a mine suddenly blown up a great part of the wall of the Spanish station, in the thick of the dust and smoke presently entered his men. Knotter.

2. THICK and thin. Whatever is in the way.

Through perils both of wind and limb,
Through thick and thin he followed him. Hud.
When first the dawn appears upon his chin,
For a small sum to swear through thick and thin. Dryden.

THICK. adv. [It is not always easy to distinguish the adverb from the adjective.]

1. Frequently; fast.

'Tis some disaster,
Or else he would not fend so thick. Denb. Sophy.
I hear the trampling of thick beating feet;
Thus way they move. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

2. Closely.

The neighb'ring plain with arms is cover'd o'er;
The vale an iron harvest seems to yield,
Of thick sprung lances in a waving field. Dryden.
A little plot of ground thick sown, is better than a great field which lies fallow. Norris's Miscellany.

3. To a great depth.

If you apply it thick spread, it will eat to the bone. Wifeman.

Cato has piercing eyes, and will discern
Our frauds, unless they're cover'd thick with arts. Addison.

4. THICK and threefold. In quick succession; in great numbers.

They came thick and threefold for a time, till one experienced sages observed the plot. L'Estrange's Fables.

THICK. n. s. A thicket; a place full of bushes.

Mists and rotten fogs
Hang in the gloomy thick, and make unfathomable. Drayton.

THICKEN. v. a. [from thick.]

To make thick.

To make close; to fill up interstices.

Waters evaporate and mounted up into the air, thicken and cool it. Wood's Natural History.

3. To condense; to make to concrete.

The white of an egg gradually dissolves by heat exceeding a little the heat of a human body; a greater degree of heat will thicken it into a white, dark-coloured, dry, viscous mass. Arbuth. on An.

4. To strengthen; to confirm.

'Tis a shrewd doubt, though it be but a dream;
And this may help to thicken other proofs,
That do demonstrate thinly. Shakespeare's Othello.

5. To make frequent.

6. To make close or numerous; as, to thicken the ranks.

TO THICKEN. v. n.

1. To grow thick.

2. To grow dense or muddy.

Thy lustre thickens.

When he shines by. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

3. To concrete; to be consolidated.

Water stop gives birth

To grass and plants, and thickens into earth. Prior.

4. To grow close or numerous.

The press of people thickens to the court,
Th' impatient crowd devouring the report. Dryd.
He saw the crowd thickening, and desired to know how many there were. Taiter.

5. To grow quick.

The combat thickens like the storm that flies
From westward when the show'ry scuds arise,
Or patting hail comes pouring on the main,
When Jupiter defends in harden'd rain. Addison.

THICKET. n. s. [dicceru, Saxon.] A close knot or tangle of trees; a close wood or copse.

I drew you hither
Into the thickest thicket of the park. Shakespeare's

Within a thicket I repos'd; and found

Let fall from heav'n a sleep interminate. Chapman.

Thus, or any of his, could not in haste creep through those desert regions, which the length of one hundred and thirty years after the flood had fortified with thickets, and permitted every bush and briar, reed and tree, to join themselves into one main body and forest. Raleigh.

How often, from the steep
Of echoing hill, or thicket, have we heard
Celestial voices, to the midnight air,
Sole, or responsive, each to other's note,
Singing their great Creator! Milton.

My brothers slept to the next thicket side.
To bring me berries. Milton.

Now Leda's twins

Their trembling lances brandish'd at the foe;
Nor had they mil'd, but he to thicket fled Conceal'd from aiming spears, not purlious to the steed. Dryden.

I've known young Juba rise before the sun,
To beat the thicket where the tyger slept,
Or seek the lion in his dreadful haunts. Add. Cato.

THICKLY. adv. [from thick.]

1. Deeply; to a great quantity.

Mending cracked receivers, having thickly overlaid them with diachylon, we could not perceive leaks. Boyle.

2. Closely; in quick succession.

THICKNESS. n. s. [from thick.]

1. The state of being thick; density.

2. Quantity of matter interposed; space taken up by matter interposed.

In the darkened room, against the hole at which the light entered, I could easily see through the whole thickness of my hand the motions of a body placed beyond it. Boyle.

3. Quantity laid on quantity to some considerable depth.

Roll a tree, and cover it some thickness with clay on the top, and see what it will put forth. Bacon's Natural History.

4. Consistence; grossness; not rarefied;
spissitude.

Wine mingled with water to the thickness of honey, and anaesthetized on the bud after the vine is cut, it will sprout forth. Bacon's Nat. History.
Diseases imagined to come from the thickness of blood, come often from the contrary cause. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

5. Imperviousness; closeness.

The banks of the river and the thickness of the shades drew into them all the birds of the country. Addison.

6. Want of sharpness; want of quickness.

A person found in himself, being at some times subject to a thickness of hearing, the like effect.

Holder.

What you write is printed in large letters; otherwise, between the weakness of my eyes and thickness of hearing, I should lose the greatest pleasure. Swift.

THICK-SCULLED. adj. Dull; stupid.

They're pleas'd to hear their thick-skull'd judges cry,
Well mov'd! oh finely said! Dryden.

This downright fighting fool, this thick-skull'd hero,

This blunt unthinking instrument of death,
With plain dull virtue he outgoes me my wit. Dryd.

THICKSET. adj. [thick and set.] Close planted.

His eye-balls glare with fire, suffus'd with blood,
His neck shoots up a thicket thorny wood;
His bristled back a trench impal'd appears,
And stands erected like a field of spears. Dryden.

The world is so thickset with the numerous productions of the creatures, that besides the apparent beauty of things viewed by all, there are those secret graces in every part of nature, which some few alone have the skill to discern. Græc.

THICKSKIN. n. s. [thick and skin.] A coarse gross man; a numskull.

The shallowest thickskin of that barren fort,
Who Pyramus presented in their sport,
Forsook his scene, and enter'd in a brake. Shak.

THIEF. n. s. [thiefs, Gothick; thef, Sax. dief, Dutch. It was anciently written thief, and so appeareth to have been of two syllables: thie was wont to be taken for thrist; so that thie of is he that takes of or from a man his thie, that is, his thrist or means whereby he thristes.]

1. One who takes what belongs to another:
the thief steals by secrecy, and the robber by violence; but these senses are confounded.

Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot by night. Shakespeare.

This he said because he was a thief, and had the bag. John.

Can you think I owe a thief my life,
Because he took it not by lawless force?
Am I obliged by that to assist his rapines,
And to maintain his murders? Dryden.

2. An excrescence in the snuff of a candle.

Their burning lamps the storm ensuing show,
Th' oil sparkles, thieves about the snuff do grow. May.

THIEF-CATCHER. n. s. [thief and catch.]

THIEF-LEADER. n. s. [thief and lead.]

THIEF-TAKER. n. s. [thief and take.]

One whose business is to detect thieves, and bring them to justice.

A wolf passed by as the thief-leaders were dragging a fox to execution. L'Estrange.

My evenings all I would with sharpeners spend,
And make the thief-catcher my bosom friend. Bransford.

TO THIEVE. v. n. [from thief.] To steal;
to practise theft.

THIEVING. n. s. [from thieve.]

1. The practice of stealing; theft.

We how to 'scape great punishment and shame,
For their false treason and vile robbery. Spenser.
Do villainy, do, since you profess to do,
Like workmen; I'll example you with thievery.

He makes it a help unto thievery; for thieves having addesign upon a house, make a fire at the four corners thereof, and cast therein the fragments of loadstone, which raiseth fume. Brown's Vulg. Er.
Amongst the Spartans, thievery was a practice morally good and honest. South.

2. That which is stolen.

Injurious time now, with a robber's hate,
Craves his rich thievery up he knows not how. Shakespeare.

THIEVISH. adj. [from thief.]

1. Given to stealing; practising theft.

What, wouldst thou have me go and beg my food?
Or with a base and boist'rous sword enforce
A thievish living on the common road? Shakespeare.

O thievish night,
Why shouldst thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars,
That nature hang in heav'n, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the mistle and lonely traveller? Milton.

The thievish God suspected him, and took
The hood aside, and thus in whispers spoke:
Discover not the theft. Addison.

2. Secret; sly; acting by stealth.

Four and twenty times the pilot's glass
Hath told the thievish minutes how they pass. Shakespeare.

THIEVISHLY. adv. [from thievish.]

Like a thief.
They lay not to live by their works,
But thievishly lither and lurke. Tupper.

THIEVISHNESS. n. f. [from thievish.]

Disposition to steal; habit of stealing.

THIGH. n. f. [ðeoþ, Saxon; thio, Icelandic; die, Dutch.]

The thigh includes all between the buttocks and the knee. The thigh bone is the longest of all the bones in the body: its fibres are close and hard:
it has a cavity in its middle: it is a little convex and round on its fore-side, but a little hollow, with a long and small ridge on its back-side. Quincy.
He touched the hollow of his thigh, and it was out of joint. Gen. xxii. 25.
The flesh dissolved, and left the thigh-bone bare. Wise.

THICK. pronoun. [ðic, Saxon.] That same. Obsolete.

I love thick lass: alas, why do I love?
She deigns not my good will, but doth reprove,
And of my rural musick holdeth scorn. Spenser's Pastoral.

THILL. n. f. [thille, Saxon, a piece of timber cut.]

The shafts of a waggon; the arms of wood between which the last horse is placed.

More easily a waggon may be drawn in rough ways, if the fore wheels were as high as the hinder wheels, and if the thills were fixed under the axis. Mortimer.

THILL-HORSE. } n. f. [thill and horse.]

THILLER. } The last horse; the horse that goes between the shafts.

Whose bridle and saddle, whitteth and nail,
Wish collars and harness for thiller and all. Tupper.
What a beard hast thou got! thou hast got more hair on thy chin, than Dobbin my thill horse has on his tail. Shakespeare.

THIMBLE. n. f. [This is supposed by

Minshew to be corrupted from thumb bill.] A metal cover by which women secure their fingers from the needle when they sew.

Your ladies and pale visag'd maids,
Like Amazons, come tripping after deans;
Their thimbles into armed gauntlets change,
Their needles to lances. Shakespeare. King John.

THIN. adj. [from thin, Lat. thym, Fr. thin.]

A fragrant herb from which the bees are supposed to draw honey. This should be written thym.

Fair marigolds, and bees alluring thym. Spenser.
THIN. adj. [thino, Saxon; thunur, Icelandic; dun, Dutch.]

1. Not thick.

Beat gold into thin plates, and cut it into wires. Exodus.

2. Rare; not dense.

The hope of the ungodly is like thin froth, that is blown away with the wind. Wisdome, v. 14.
In the day when the air is more thin, the sound pierceth better; but when the air is more thick, as in the night, the sound spreadeth and spreadeth abroad less. Bacon.

Understand this same
Of fish within their wat'ry residence;
Not hither summon'd, since they cannot change
Their element, to draw the thinner air. Milton.

The waters of Borthenness are so thin and light, that they swim upon the top of the stream of the river Hypanis. Mura.
To warm new milk pour any alkali, the liquor will remain at rest, though it appear somewhat thinner. Arbutnot.

3. Not close; separate by large spaces.

He pleas'd the thin and bashful audience
Of our well-meaning, frugal ancestors. Reverend.
Thou art weak, and full of art is he;
Else how could he that host seduce to sin,
Whose fall has left the heav'nly nation thin? Dryden.

Northward, beyond the mountains we will go,
Where rocks lie cover'd with eternal snow,
Thin herbage in the plains, and fruitless fields;
The sand no gold, the mine no silver yields. Dryden.
Thin on the bow're they stand; and ev'n those few,
A feeble, fainting, and dejected crew. Dryden.

Already Caesar
Has ravag'd more than half the globe; and sees Mankind grown thin by his destructive sword. Add.
Sick with the love of fame, what throngs pour in,
Unpeople court, and leave the senate thin! Young.

4. Not closely compacted or accumulated.

Seven thin ears blaz'd with the east wind sprung up. Genesis.

5. Exile; small.

I hear the groans of ghosts;
Thin, hollow sounds, and lamentable screams. Dry.

6. Not coarse; not gross in substance: as, a thin veil.

7. Not abounding.

Ferrara is very large, but extremely thin of people. Addison.

8. Not fat; not bulky; lean; slim; slender.

A slim thin-gutt'd fox made a hard shift to wriggle his body into a hen-roost; and when he had stuffed his guts well, the hole was too little to get out again. L'Estrange.

THIN. adv. Not thickly.

Spain is thin sown of people, by reason of the sterility of the soil, and the natives being exhausted in such vast territories as they possess. Bacon.
Remove the swelling epithets, thick laid
As varnish on a harlot's cheek; the rest
Thin sown with ought of profit or delight. Milton.

Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise,
That last infirmity of noble mind,
To scorn delights, and love laborious days;
But the fair guerdon when we hope'd to find,
And think to burst out into sudden blaze,
Comes the blind fury with th' abhorred steers,
And fits the thin-spun life. Milton.

THIN. adv. [from the adjective.]

1. To make thin or rare; to make less thick.

The serum of the blood is neither acid nor alkaline: oil of vitriol thickens, and oil of tartar thins it a little. Arbutnot.

2. To make less close or numerous.

The hill against poor and branch never parted, till both houses were sufficiently thinned and over-awed. King Charles.

To unload the branches, or the leaves to thin.
That suck the vital moisture of the vine. Dryden.
'Tis Caesar's sword has made Rome's senate thine,
And thinn'd its ranks. Addison's Cato.

3. To attenuate.

The vapours, by the solar heat
Thinn'd and exhal'd, rise to their airy seat. Black.

THINE. pronoun. [thine, Gothick; sin, Saxon; dijn, Dutch.]

Belonging or relating to thee; the pronoun possessive of thou. It is used for thy when the substantive is divided from it: as, this is thy house; thine is this house; this house is thine.

Thou hast her, France; let her be thine, for we Have no such daughter. Shakespeare. King Lear.

THING. n. f. [þing, Saxon; ding, Dut.]

1. Whatever is; not a person. A general word.

Do not you chide; I have a thing for you.
—You have a thing for me?
It is a common thing.
—Ha!
—To have a foolish wife. Shakespeare. Othello.

The great master he found busy in packing up his things against his departure. Kneller's History of the Turks.

The remnant of the meat-offering is a thing most holy. Lev. ii. 3.

Says the master, You devour the same things that they would have eaten, mice and all. L'Estrange.
When a thing is capable of good proof in any kind, men ought to rest satisfied in the best evidence for it which that kind of things will bear; and beyond which better would not be expected, supposing it were true. Withins.

I should blush to own so rude a thing.
As 'tis to shun the brother of my king. Dryden.

Wicked men, who understand any thing of wisdom, may see the imprudence of worldly and irregular courses. Thilgson.

Princes, when they come to know the true state of things, are not unwilling to prevent their own ruin. Davenant.

2. It is used in contempt.

I have a thing in prose, begun about twenty-eight years ago, and almost finished: it will make a four shilling volume. Swift.

3. It is used of persons in contempt, or sometimes with pity.

See, sons, what things you are! how quickly nature
Falls to revolt, when gold becomes her object!
For this the foolish over-careful fathers
Have broke their sleeps with thought, their brains with care. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

A thing by neither man or woman priz'd,
And scarcely known enough to be despis'd. Dryden.
Never any thing was so undrest as that odious man. Congreve.

The poor thing sigh'd, and, with a blessing expressed with the utmost vehemence, turned from me. Addison.

I'll be this abject thing no more.
Love, give me back my heart again. Granville.

4. It is used by Shakespeare once in a sense of honour.

I lov'd

I lov'd the maid I married; never man
Sigh'd truer breath: but that I see thee here,
Thou noble thing! more dances my wrapt heart.
Shakespeare.

To THINK. v. n. preter. thought. [thank- gan, Gothick; Dencean, Saxon; denck- en, Dutch.]

1. To have ideas; to compare terms or things; to reason; to cogitate; to perform any mental operation, whether of apprehension, judgment, or illation.

Thinking, in the propriety of the English tongue, signifies that sort of operation of the mind about its ideas, wherein the mind is active; where it, with some degree of voluntary attention, considers any thing. Locke.

What am I? or from whence? for that I am
I know, because I think; but whence I came,
Or how this frame of mine began to be,
What other being can disclose to me? Dryden.

Those who perceive dully, or retain ideas in their minds ill, will have little matter to think on. Locke.

It is an opinion, that the soul always thinks, and that it has the actual perception of ideas in itself constantly; and that actual thinking is as inseparable from the soul, as actual extension is from the body. Locke.

These are not matters to be slightly and superficially thought upon. Tillotson's Sermons.

His experience of a good prince must give great satisfaction to every thinking man. Addis. Freeb.

2. To judge; to conclude; to determine.
Let them marry to whom they think best;
only to their father's tribe shall they marry.

Numb. xxvi. 6.

I fear we shall not find
This long desired king such as was thought. Daniel.
Can it be thought that I have kept the gospel terms of salvation, without ever so much attending, in any serious and deliberate manner, either to know them, or keep them? Law.

3. To intend.
Thou thought'st to help me, and such thanks
I give;
As one near death to those that with him live.
Shakespeare.

4. To imagine; to fancy.
Something since his coming forth is thought of,
which
Imports the kingdom so much fear and danger,
That his return was most requir'd. Shak. K. Lear.
Edmund, I think is gone,
In pity of his misery, to dispatch
His nighted life. Shakespeare. King Lear.

We may not be startled at the breaking of the exterior earth; for the face of nature hath provoked men to think of and observe such a thing.

Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Those who love to live in gardens, have never thought of contriving a winter garden. Speffator.

5. To muse; to meditate.
You pipe, you languish, love to be alone,
Think much, speak little, and in speaking sigh.
Dryden.

6. To recollect; to observe.
We are come to have the warrant!
—Well thought upon, I have it here about me.
Shakespeare.

Think upon me, my God, for good, according to all that I have done. Nehemiah, v. 19.

7. To judge; to be of opinion.
If your general acquaintance be among ladies, provided they have an ill reputation, you think you are safe. Swift.

8. To consider; to doubt; to deliberate.
Any one may think with himself; how then can any thing live in Mercury and Saturn?
Bentley's Sermons.

9. To THINK on. To contrive; to light upon by meditation.

Still the work was not complete,
When Venus thought on a deceit. Swift's Miscell.

10. To THINK of. To estimate.
The opinions of others whom we know and think well of are no ground of dissent. Locke.

To THINK. v. a.

1. To imagine; to imagine in the mind;
to conceive.

Charity thinketh no evil. 1 Cor. xiii. 3.
Nor think superfluous others aid. Milton.
Think naught a trifle though it small appear.
Young.

2. To THINK much. To grudge.

He thought not much to clothe his enemies. Milt.
If we consider our infinite obligations to God, we have no reason to think much to sacrifice to him our dearest interests in this world. Tillotson.

3. To THINK scorn. To disdain.

He thought scorn to lay hands on Mordecai alone.
Esther, iii.

{ Me THINKETH. It seems to me.

{ Me THOUGHT. It appeared to me.
These are anomalous phrases of long continuance and great authority, but not easily reconciled to grammar. In me thinketh, the verb being of the third person, seems to be referred not to the thing, and is therefore either active, as signifying to cause to think; or as the sense of seems, methinks it seems to me.

Me thought I saw the grave where Laura lay.
Sidney.

Me thinketh the running of the forenoon is like that of Ahimsaz. 2 Sam. xviii. 27.

THINKER. n. f. [from think.] One who thinks in a certain manner.

No body is made any thing by hearing of rules, or laying them up in his memory; practice must settle the habit: you may as well hope to make a good musician by a lecture on the art of music, as a coherent thinker, or strict reasoner, by a set of rules. Locke.

If a man had an ill-favoured nose, deep think- ers would impute the cause to the prejudice of his education. Swift.

THINKING. n. f. [from think.] Imagination; cogitation; judgment.

He put it by once; but, to my thinking, he would fain have had it. Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.

If we did think
His contemplations were above the earth,
And fix'd on spiritual objects, he should still Dwell in his musings; but I am afraid
His thinkings are below the moon, nor worth
His serious considering. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

I heard a bird so sing,
Whose music, to my thinking, pleas'd the king.
Shakespeare.

I was a man, to my thinking, very likely to get a rich widow. Addison.

THINLY. adv. [from thin.]

1. Not thickly.

2. Not closely; not numerously.

It is commonly opinioned, that the earth was thinly inhabited before the flood. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Our walls are thinly mann'd; our best men slain:
The rest, an heartless number, spent with watching. Dryden.

THINNENESS. n. f. [from thin.]

1. The contrary to thickness; exility;
tenuity.

Tickling is most in the sides, arm-holes and sides, because of the thinness of the skin. Bacon.

No breach, but an expansion,
Like gold to airy thinness beat. Donne.

Transparent substances, as glass, water, air, &c.
when made very thin by being blown into bubbles, or otherwise formed into plates, do exhibit various colours, according to their various thinness, although at a greater thickness they appear very clear and colourless. Newton's Opticks.

Such depend upon a strong, perfusible motion of the blood, and too great thinness and delicacy of the vessels. Arbuthnot.

2. Paucity; scarcity.

The buzzard
Invites the feather'd Nimrod of his race
To hide the thinness of their flock from sight,
And all together make a seeming goodly flight.
Dryden.

In country villages pope Leo the seventh indulged a practice, through the thinness of the inhabitants, which opened a way for pluralities.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. Rareness; not spissitude.

Those pleasures that spring from honour the mind can nauseate, and quickly feel the thinness of a popular breath. South.

THIRD. adj. [Synon. Saxon.] The first after the second; the ordinal of three.

This is the third time: I hope good luck lies in odd numbers. Shakespeare.

Such clamours are like the feigned quarrels of combined cheats, to delude some third person.

Decay of Piety.

THIRD. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. The third part.

To thee and thine hereditary ever;
Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom. Shak.

blackbirds, and thrushes. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
Pain, and a fine thrush, have been severally endeavouring to call off my attention, but both in vain. Pope.

2. [From thrust: as we say, a push; a breaking out.] By this name are called small, round, superficial ulcerations, which appear first in the mouth; but as they proceed from the obstruction of the emissaries of the saliva, by the lentor and viscofity of the humour, they may affect every part of the alimentary duct, except the thick guts: they are just the same in the inward parts as scabs in the skin, and fall off from the inside of the bowels like a crust: the nearer they approach to a white colour the less dangerous. Arbutnot on Diet.

To THRUST. v. a. [trufsto, Lat.]

heavy dead dull blow with something blunt.

And blund'ring still with smarting rump,

He gave the knight's steed such a thump

As made him reel. Hudibras.

Before, behind, the blows are dealt, around

Their hollow sides the rattling thumps: rebound.

Dryden.

Their thumps and bruises might turn to account, if they could beat each other into good manners. Addison.

The watchman gave so great a thump at my door, that I awaked at the knock. Tatler.

To THUMP. v. a. To beat with dull heavy blows.

Those bastard Britons, whom our fathers
Have in their land beaten, bob'd, and thump'd.
Shakespeare.

To THUMP. v. n. To fall or strike with a dull heavy blow.

A stone
Levell'd to right, it thump'd upon
His manly paunch, with such a force,
As almost beat him off his horse. Hudibras.
A watchman at midnight thumps with his pole.
Swift.

THUMPER. n. f. [from thump.] The person or thing that thumps.

THUNDER. n. f. [Sunben, Sunon, Sax. dunder, Swedish; donder, Dutch; tonnerre, French.]

1. Thunder is a most bright flame rising on a sudden, moving with great violence, and with a very rapid velocity, through the air, according to any determination, upwards from the earth, horizontally, obliquely, downwards, in a right line, or in several right lines, as it were in serpentine tracts, joined at various angles, and commonly ending with a loud noise or rattling.

2. In popular and poetick language, thunder is commonly the noise, and lightning the flash; though thunder is sometimes taken for both.

I do not bid the thunder bearer shoot,
Nor tell tales of thee to high-judging Jove. Shak.
The revenging gods
'Gainst parricides all the thunder bend. Shakespeare.

Wing'd with red lightning and impetuous rage,
Perhaps hath spent his shafts, and ceases now
To bellow through the vast and boundless deep.
Milton.

3. Any loud noise or tumultuous violence.
So fierce he 'bout about him, and dealt blows
On either side, that neither mail could hold
No shield defend the thunder of his throw. Spenser.
Here will we face this storm of intellect,
Nor fear the noisy thunder, let it roll,
Then burst, and spend at once its idleness. Rosset.

To THUNDER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To make thunder.

His nature is too noble for the world;
He wd not flatter Neptune for his trident,
Nor Jove for's power to thunder. Shak. Coriolanus.

2. To make a loud or terrible noise.

So soon as some few notable examples had thundered a duty into the subjects hearts, he soon shewed no balencis of suspicion. Sidney.

His dreadful name late through all Spain did
thunder,

And Hercules' two pillars standing near Did make to quake and fear. Spenser.

His dreadful voice no more
Would thunder in my ear. Milton.

Like a black sheet the whelming billow spread,
Burst o'er the flat, and thunder'd on his head.
Pope.

To THUNDER. v. a.

1. To emit with noise and terrour.

Quarrel's severe
Were daily thunder'd in our general's ear,
That by his daughter's blood we must appease
Diana's kindred wrath. Dryden.

2. To publish any denunciation or threat.

An archdeacon, as being a prelate, may thunder out an ecclesiastical censure. Ayliffe.

THUNDERBOLT. n. f. [thunder and bolt,
as it signifies an arrow.]

1. Lightning; the arrows of heaven.

If I had a thunderbolt in mine eye, I can tell who should down. Shakespeare.

VOL. II.

Let the lightning of this thunderbolt, which hath been so severe a punishment to one, be a terrour to all. King Charles.

My heart does beat,
As if 'twere forging thunderbolts for Jove. Denham.
Who can omit the Gracchi, who declare
The Scipio's worth, those thunderbolts of war? Dryden.

The most remarkable piece in Antonine's pillar, is Jupiter Pluvius sending down rain on the fainting army of Marcus Aurelius, and thunderbolts on his enemies; which is the greatest confirmation of the story of the Christian legion. Addison.

2. Fulmination; denunciation; properly ecclesiastical.

He severely threatens such with the thunderbolt of excommunication. Hazewell on Providence.

THUNDERCLAP. n. f. [thunder and clap.]
Explosion of thunder.

The kindly bird that bears Jove's thunderclap,
One day did scorn the humble scarabee,
Proud of his highest service, and good hap,
That made all other fowls his thralls to be. Spenser.

When some dreadful thunderclap is high,
The winged fire shoots swiftly through the sky;
Strikes and consumes ere scarce it does appear,
And, by the sudden ill, prevents the tear. Dryden.

When suddenly the thunderclap was heard,
It took us unprepared, and out of guard. Dryden.

THUNDERER. n. f. [from thunder.] The power that thunders.

How dare you, ghosts,
Accuse the thunderer, whose bolt you know,
Sky-planted, batters all rebelling coasts? Shakespeare.

Had the old Greeks discover'd your abode,
Cete had n't been the cradle of their god;
On that small island they had look'd with scorn,
And in Great Britain thought the thunderer born. Waller.

When the bold Typhus
Forc'd great Jove from his own heav'n to fly,
The lesser gods, that shar'd his prosperous state,
All suffer'd in the exit thunderer's fate. Dryden.

THUNDEROUS. adj. [from thunder.] Producing thunder.

Look in and see each blissful deity,
How he before the thunderous throne doth lie. Milton.

THUNDERSHOWER. n. f. [thunder and shower.] A rain accompanied with thunder.

The conceit is long in delivering, and at last it comes like a thundershower, full of sulphur and darken'd, with a terrible crack. Stirlingfleet.

In thundershowers the wind, and clouds mix ofentimes contrary to one another, especially if hail falls, the sultry weather below anecting the wind one way, and the cold above the clouds another.

Drum's Physico-Theology.

THUNDERSTONE. n. f. [thunder and stone.] A stone fabulously supposed to be emitted by thunder; thunderbolt.

Fear no more the lightning flash,
Nor th' all-dreaded thunderstone. Shak. Cymbeline.

To THUNDERSTRIKE. n. f. [thunder and strike.]

1. To blast or hurt with lightning.

I remained as a man thunderstruck, not daring, nay, not able, to behold that power. Sidney.

The overthrown he rais'd, and as a herd
Of goats, or tim'rous flock, together throng'd, Drove them before him thunderstruck. Milton.

With the voice divine
Nigh thunderstruck, th' exalted man, to whom Such high a gift was given, a while survey'd
With wonder. Milton's Paradise Regained.

'Tis said that thunderstruck Enceladus Lies stretch'd supine. Addison.

2. To astonish with any thing terrible.

Fears from our hearts took
The very life; to be to thunderstruck
With such a voice. Chapman.

THUNDEROUS. adj. [thunderer, Latin.]
Bearing frankincense.

THURIFICATION. n. f. [thuris, and fatio, Lat.] The act of fuming with incense;
the act of burning incense.

The several acts of worship which were required to be performed to images are processions, genuflections, thurifications, osculations, and oblations. Stillingfleet.

THURSDAY. n. f. [thorsdag, Danish;
from thor. Thor was the son of Odin;
yet in some of the northern parts they worshipped the Supreme Deity under his name, attributing the power over all things, even the inferior deities, to him. Stillingfleet.] The fifth day of the week.

THUS. adv. [Thur, Saxon.]

1. In this manner; in this wise.

It cannot be that they who speak thus, should thus judge. Hooker.

The knight him calling, asked who he was?
Who lifting up his head, him answer'd thus. Spenser.

I returned with similar proof enough,
With tokens thus, and thus. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

To be thus is nothing;
But to be safely thus. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

I have sinned against the Lord, and thus and thus have I done. Job, vii. 23.

The Romans used a like wise endeavour, and whiles in a higher, in a wiser strain, making concord a deity; thus seeking peace, not by an oath, but by prayer. Illydus.

That the principle that sets on work these organs, is nothing else but the modification of matter thus or thus poised, is false. Judge Hale.

Beware, I warn thee yet, to tell thy guests
In terms becoming majesty to hear.

I warn thee thus, because I know thy temper is insolent. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

Thus in the triumphs of soft peace I reign.
Dryden.

All were attentive to the godlike man,
When from his lofty couch he thus began. Dryden's Æneid.

2. To this degree; to this quantity.

A counsellor of state in Spain said to his master,
I will tell your majesty thus much for your comfort, your majesty hath too many enemies; whereof the one is all the world, and the other your own ministers. Bacon.

Even thus wife, that is, thus peaceable, were very heathens, thus peaceable among themselves, though without grace; thus peaceable by wife nature very like grace. Holyday.

He said, Thus far extend, thus far thy bounds.
Milton.

Thus much concerning the first earth, and its production and form. Burser's Theory.

No man reasonably pretends to know thus much,
but he must pretend to know all things. Tillotson.

Thus you must do to inherit life; and if you have come up thus far, firmly persevere in it. Wake.

To THWACK. v. a. [Daccian, Saxon.]

To strike with something blunt and heavy; to thresh; to bang; to belabour.
A ludicrous word.

He shall not stay;
We'll thwack him hence with distaffs. Shakespeare.

Nick fell foul upon John Bull, to snatch the cudgel he had in his hand, that he might thwack
Lewis with it. Arbutnot.

These long fellows, as lightly as they are, should find their jacks well thwacked. Arbutnot.

THWACK. n. f. [from the verb.] A heavy hard blow.

But Talgol first with a hard thwack
Twice bruised his back, and twice his back. Hudibras.

They place thwack on the rice, with cudgels.

THY

the neighbourhood of each pot; the monkeys descend from the trees, take up the arms, and belabour one another with a storm of thwacks.
Addison's Freeholder.

THWART. adj. [Thryn, Sax. dwars. Dut.]

1. Transverse; cros to something else.

This esse to several spheres thou must ascribe, Mov'd contrary with thwart obliquities. Milton.

2. Perverse; inconvenient; mischievous.

To THWART. v. a.

1. To cros; to lie or come across any thing.

Swift as a shooting star
In autumn thwarts the night. Milton's Par. Lost.
Yon stream of light, a thousand ways
Upward and downward thwarting and convolv'd.

Thomson.

2. To cros; to oppose; to travel; to contravene.

Some sixteen months and longer might have said,
If crooked fortune had not thwarted me. Shakespeare.

Lauffer had been

The thwarting of your dispositions, if You had not shew'd how you were dispos'd

Ere they lack power to cros you. Shak. Coriolanus.

The understanding and will then never disagree;
for the proposals of the one never thwarted the inclinations of the other.

South.

The rays both good and bad, of equal power,
Each thwarting other made a mingled hour. Dryd.

In vain did I the godlike youth deplore:
The more I begg'd, they thwarted me the more.

Addison.

Neptune aton'd, his wrath shall now refrain,
Or thwart the synod of the gods in vain.

Pope's Odyssey.

By thwarting passions tost, by cares oppress'd,
He found the tempest pictur'd in his breast. Young.

To THWART. v. n. To be in opposition to.

It is easy to be imagined what reception any proposition shall find, that shall at all thwart with these internal oracles.

Locke.

THWARTING. n. f. [from thwart.] The act of crossing, &c. as the verb.

THWARTINGLY. adv. [from thwarting.] Oppositely; with opposition.

THY. pronoun. [Thin, Saxon.] Of thee; belonging to thee; relating to thee; the possessive of thou. See THOU.

Whatever God did try,
Is all thy clear and smooth uninterrupted way.

Cowley.

Th' example of the heavenly lark,
T'by fellow poet, Cowley, merr.

Cowley.

These are thy works, parent of good! Milton.

TYNE wood. n. f. A precious wood.

The merchandize of gold and all thyne wood are departed from thee. Revelations, xviii. 12.

THYME. n. f. [thym, Fr. thymus, Lat.] A plant.

The thyme hath a labiated flower, consisting of one leaf, whole upper-lip is erect, and generally split in two, and the under-lip is divided into three parts; out of the flower-cup arises the puntal, accompanied by four embrios, which afterward become so many seeds, inclosed in a husk, which before was the flower-cup, to these marks must be added hard ligneous stalks, and the flower gathered into heads.

Miller.

No more, my goats, will I behold you climb
The steepy cliffs, or crop the flow'ry thyme. Dryd.

THYSELF. pronoun rel. refl. [thy and self.]

It is commonly used in the oblique cases, or following the verb.

Come high or low,

Thyself and office dextly show. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

It must and shall be so; content thyself. Swift.

In poetical or solemn language it is sometimes used in the nominative.

These goods thyself can on thyself bestow. Dryd.

TIC

Ti'AR. n. f. [tiare, Fr. tiara, Latin.] A

Ti'ARA. n. f. dress for the head; a diadem.

His back was turn'd, but not his brightness hid;
Of beaming sunny rays a golden tiar

Circled his head. Milton's Paradise Lost.

This royal robe and this tiara wore Old Priam, and this golden sceptre bore

In full assemblies. Dryden's Æneid.

A tiar wreath'd her head with many a fold,
Her waist was circled with a zone of gold. Pope.

Fairer she seem'd, distinguish'd from the rest,
And better mien dispos'd, as better dress:

A bright tiara round her forehead ty'd,
To juster bounds confin'd its rising pride. Prior.

To TICKE. v. a. [from entice.] To draw; to allure.

Lovely enchanting language, sugar-cane,
Honey of soles, whither wilt thou fly?

Halt some fond lover t' d thee to thy lane?
And wilt thou leave the church, and love a fly?

Herbert.

TICK. n. f. [This word seems contracted from ticket, a tally on which debts are scored.]

1. Score; trust.

If thou hast the heart to try 't,
I'll lend thee back thyself awhile,

And once more for that carcase vie Fight upon tick. Hudibras.

When the money is got into hands that have bought all that they have need of, whoever needs any thing else must go on tick, or barter for it. Locke.

You would see him in the kitchen weighing the beef and butter, paying ready money, that the maids might not run a tick at the market.

Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

2. [Tique, Fr. teke, Dutch.] The louse of dogs or sheep.

Would the fountain of your mind were clear again, that I might water an ass at it! I had rather be a tick in a sheep, than such a valiant ignorance.

Shakespeare's Titus and Grissida.

3. The case which holds the feathers of a bed.

To TICK. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To run on score.

2. To trust; to score.

The money went to the lawyers; council won't tick.

Arbutnot.

TICKEN. n. f. The same with tick. A

TICKING. n. f. sort of strong linen for bedding.

Bailey.

TICKET. n. f. [etiquet, French.] A token of any right or debt, upon the delivery of which admission is granted, or a claim acknowledged.

There should be a paymaster appointed, of special trust, which should pay every man according to his captain's ticket, and the account of the clerk of his band.

Spenser.

In a lottery with one prize, a single ticket is only enriched, and the rest are all blanks. Collier on Envy.

Let tops or fortune fly which way they will,
Disdains all loss of tickets or todille. Pope.

To TICKLE. v. a. [tutillo, Latin.]

1. To affect with a prurient sensation by slight touches.

Dissembling courtesy! How true this tyrant
Can tickle where the wounds! Shakespeare. Cymbeline.

The mind is moved in great vehemency only by a sharp smart of the body.

Bacon.

There is a sweetness in good words, which tickles even while it hurts, and no man can be heartily angry with him who pleases him against his will.

Dryden.

It is a good thing to laugh at any rate; and if a straw can tickle a man, it is an instrument of happiness.

Dryden.

2. To please by slight gratifications.

Dametas, that of all manners of stile could best conceive of golden eloquence, being wish'd tickled by Musidorus's praises, had his brain so turned, that he became slave to that which he that sued to be his servant offered to give him. Sidney.

Expectation tickling skittish spirits,
Sets all on hazard, Shakespeare.

Such a nature
Tickled with good success, disdains the shadow
Which it trades on at noon. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

I cannot rule my spleen,
My scorn rebels, and tickles me within. Dryden.

Dunce at the best; in streets but scarce allow'd
To tickle, on thy straw, the stupid crowd. Dryden.

A drunkard the habitual thirst after his cups drives to the tavern, though he has in his view the loss of health, and perhaps of the joys of another life, the least of which is such a good as he contestes is far greater than the tickling of his palate with a glass of wine. Locke.

To TICKLE. v. n. To feel titillation.

He with secret joy theretore
Did tickle inwardly in every vein,

And his false heart, fraught with all treason's store,
Was tick'd with hope his purpose to obtain. Spenser.

TICKLE. adj. [I know not whence to deduce the sense of this word.] Tottering; unfixed; unstable; easily overthrown.

When the last O'Neal began to stand upon some tickle terms, this fellow, called baron of Dungan-non, was set up to beard him. Spenser on Ireland.

Thy head stands so tickle on thy shoulders, that a milkmaid, if she be in love, may sigh it off.

Shakespeare.

The state of Normandy
Stands on a tickle point, now they are gone. Slak.

TICKLISH. adj. [from tickle.]

1. Sensible to titillation; easily tickled.

The palm of the hand, though it hath as thin a skin as the other parts, yet is not ticklish, because it is accustomed to be touched. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. Tottering; uncertain; unfixed.

Ireland was a ticklish and unsettled state, more easily to receive distempers and mutations than England was. Bacon.

Did it stand upon so ticklish and tottering a foundation as some men's fancy hath plac'd it, it would be no wonder should it frequently vary.

Woodward's Natural History.

3. Difficult; nice.

How shall our author hope a gentle fate,
Who dars most impudently not translate?

It had been civil, in these ticklish times,
To fetch his tools and knaves from foreign climes.

Swift.

TICKLISHNESS. n. f. [from ticklish.] The state of being ticklish.

TICKTACK. n. f. [tridrac, Fr.] A game at tables.

Bailey.

TID. adj. [tybden, Saxon.] Tender; soft; nice.

TIDBIT. n. f. [tid and bit.] A dainty.

To TIDDL. v. a. [from tid.] To use

To TIDDL. v. a. tenderly; to fondle.

TIDE. n. f. [tyb, Saxon; tyd, Dutch and Islandick.]

1. Time; season; while.

There they alight, in hope themselves to hide
From the fierce heat, and rest their weary limbs a tide. Spenser.

They two forth passing
Received those two fair brides, their love's delight,

Which, at the appointed tide,
Each one did make his bride. Spenser.

What hath this day deserv'd,
That it in golden letter should be set
Among the high tides in the calendar?

Shakespeare's King John.

At new-year's tide following, the king chose him master of the horse. Watson.

2. Alternate ebb and flow of the sea.

That motion of the water called tides, is a rising and falling of the sea: the cause of this is the attraction of the moon, whereby the part of the water in the great ocean which is nearest the moon, being most strongly attracted, is raised higher than the rest, and the part opposite to it being least attracted, is also higher than the rest; and these two opposite rises of the surface of the water in the great ocean following the motion of the moon from east to west, and striking against the large coasts of the continents, from thence rebound back again, and so make floods and ebbs in narrow seas and rivers. Locke.

3. Commotion; violent confluence.

As in the tides of people once up, there want not stirring winds to make them more rough, so this people did light upon two ringleaders. Bacon's Henry VII.

4. Stream; course.

Thou art the ruins of the noblest man
That ever lived in the tide of times. Shakespeare.
The rapid currents drive
Towards the retreating sea their furious tide. Milt.
But let not all the gold which Tagus hides,
And pays the sea in tributary tides,
Be bribe sufficient to corrupt thy breast,
Or violate with streams thy peaceful rest. Dryden.
Continual tide
Flows from th' exultating fount. Philips.

To TIDE. v. a. [from the noun.] To drive with the stream.

Their images, the relics of the wreck,
Torn from the wreck'd poop, are tid'd back
By the wild waves, and rudely thrown ashore. Dryden.

To TIDE. v. n. To pour a flood; to be agitated by the tide.

Why n' troubl'dst the foe still backward thrunk,
Warring within the Ouse, he dealt his blows,
And sent them, rolling, to the tiding Humb. Philips.

TIDEGATE. n. f. [tide and gate.] A gate through which the tide passes into a basin.

TIDEMAN. n. f. [tide and man.] A tide-waiter or customhouse officer, who watches on board of merchant-ships till the duty of goods be paid, and the ships unloaded.

TIDEWAITER. n. f. [tide and wait.] An officer who watches the landing of goods at the customhouse.

Employments will be in the hands of Englishmen; nothing left for Irishmen but vicarage and tidewaiter's places. Swift.

TIDELY. adv. [from tidy.] Neatly; readily.

TIDINESS. n. f. [from tidy.] Neatness; readiness.

TIDINGS. n. f. [tidan, Saxon, to happen, to betide; tideude, Islandick.] News; an account of something that has happened; incidents related.

When her eyes she on the dwarf had set,
And saw the signs that deadly tidings spake,
She fell to ground for fearful regret. Spenser.
I shall make my master glad with these tidings. Shakespeare.

They win

Great numbers of each nation to receive,
With joy, the tidings brought from heav'n. Milt.
Portius, thy looks speak somewhat of importance:

What tidings dost thou bring? methinks I see Unusual gladness sparkling in thy eyes. Addison.
The messenger of these glad tidings, by whom this covenant of mercy was proposed and ratified, was the eternal Son of his bosom. Rogers.

TIDY. adj. [tid, Islandick.]

1. Seasonable.

If weather be faire and tidy, thy grain
Make speedie carriage, for fear of a raine. Tass.

2. Neat; ready.

Whenever by yon barley-mow I pass,
Before my eyes will trip the tidy lass. Gay's Past.

3. It seems to be here put by mistake or irony for untidy.

Thou whorl on tidy Bartholomew boar-pig, when wilt thou leave fighting? Shakespeare's Henry IV.

To TIE. v. a. [rian, tigan, Saxon.]

1. To bind; to fasten with a knot.

Tie the king to the cart, and bring their calves home from them. Samuel, vi. 7.

Thousands of men and women, tied together in chains, were, by the cruel Turks, enforced to run as fast as their horses. Kneller's History.

2. To knit; to complicate.

We do not tie this knot with an intention to puzzle the argument; but the harder it is tied, we shall feel the pleasure more sensibly when we come to loose it. Burnet.

3. To hold; to fasten; to join so as not easily to be parted.

In bond of virtuous love together tied,
Together serv'd they, and together died. Fairfax.
The intermediate ideas tie the extremes so firmly together, and the probability is so clear, that assent necessarily follows it. Locke.

Certain theorems resolve propositions which depend on them, and are as firmly made out from thence, as if the mind went afresh over every link of the whole chain that ties them to first self-evident principles. Locke.

4. To hinder; to obstruct: with up intensive.

Death, that hath ta'en her hence to make me wail,
Ties up my tongue, and will not let me speak. Shakespeare.

Melantius, stay,
You have my promise; and my hasty word
Refrains my tongue, but ties not up my sword. Wallis.

Honour and good-nature may tie up his hands, but as these would be very much strengthened by reason and principle, without them they are only infectious. Addison.

5. To oblige; to constrain; to restrain; to confine.

Although they profess they agree with us touching a precept for prayer to be used in the church, they have declared that it shall not be prescribed as a thing whereunto they will tie their ministers. Hooker.

It is the coward's terror of his spirit,
That does not undertake; he'll not feel wrongs
Which he him to an answer. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Cannot God make any of the appropriate acts of worship to become due only to himself? cannot he tie us to perform them to him? Stillingfleet.

They tie the motive so strictly to unity of place, that you never see in any of their plays a scene change in the middle of an act. Dryden.

Not tied to rule, of policy, you find Revenge less sweet than a forgiving mind. Dryden.
No one seems less tied up to a form of words. Locke.

The mind should, by several rules, be tied down to this, at first, uneasy task; it will give it facility. Locke.

They have no uneasy expectations of what is to come, but are ever tied down to the present moment. Atterbury.

A healthy man ought not to tie himself up to strict rules, nor to abstain from any sort of food in common use. Arbutnot.

6. It may be observed of tie, that it has often the particles up and down joined to it, which are, for the most part, little more than emphatical, and which, when united with this word, have at least consequently the same meaning.

TIE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Knot; fastening.

2. Bond; obligation.

The rebels that had shaken off the great yoke of obedience, had likewise cast away the lesser tie of respect. Bacon.

No forest, cave, or savage den
Holds more pernicious beasts than men;
Vows, oaths, and contracts they devise,
And tell us they are sacred ties. Waller.

3. A knot of hair.

The well-twin'd tress an equal homage claim,
And either shoulder has its share of fame. Young.

TIER. n. f. [tiere, tierce, old Fr. tierce, Dutch.] A row; a rank.

Pompeius, in his choler, discharged a tier of great ordnance amongst the thickest of them. Kneller.

TIERCE. n. f. [tiers, tiercier, French.] A vessel holding the third part of a pipe.

Go now deny his tierce. Ben Jonson.

Wit, like tierce, clarer, when't begins to pall,
Neglected lies, and 's of no use at all;
But in its full perfection of decay
Turns vinegar, and comes again in play. Duffer.

TIERCE. n. f. [from tiers, French.] A triplet; three lines.

TIER. n. f. [A low word, I suppose without etymology.]

1. Liquor; drink.

I, whom griping penury surrounds,
And hunger, true attendant upon want,
With scanty offals, and small acid tiff,
Wretched repast! my meagre corps sustain. Philips.

2. A fit of peevishness or sullenness; a pet.

To TIE. v. n. To be in a pet; to quarrel. A low word.

TIFFANY. n. f. [tiffer, to dress up, old Fr. Skinner.] Very thin silk.

The smok of sulphur will not black a paper, and is commonly used by women to whiten tiffanies. Brown.

TIGE. n. f. [in architecture.] The shaft of a column from the astragal to the capital.

TIGER. n. f. [tigre, Fr. tigris, Latin.] A fierce beast of the leonine kind.

When the blast of war blows in your ears,
Then imitate the action of the tiger:
Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood.

Shakespeare's Henry V.

Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear,
The arm'd rhinoceros, or Hyrcanian tiger;
Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves Shall never tremble. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Has the steer,
At whose strong chest the deadly tiger hangs,
Ever plow'd for him? Tomson's Spring.

TIGHT. adj. [dicht, Dutch.]

1. Tense; close; not loose.

If the centre holes be not very deep, and the pikes fill them not very tight, the strength of the string will alter the centre holes. Musson's Mechanical Exercises.

I do not like this running knot, it holds too tight; I may be distill'd all at a sudden. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

Every joint was well grooved; and the door did not move on hinges, but up and down like a fast, which kept my closet so tight that very little water came in. Swift.

2. Free from fluttering rags; less than neat.

A tight maid, ere he for wine can ask,
Gurples his meaning, and unloils the flask. Dryden's Juvenal.

The girl was a tight clever wench as any. Arbutnot.
O Thom is, I'll make a loving wife;
I'll spin and card, and keep our children tight. Gay.
Dress her again gentler and neat,
And rather tight than great. Swift.

To TIGHTEN. v. a. [from tight.] To straiten; to make close.

TIGHTER. n. f. [from tighten.] A ribband or string by which women straiten their clothes.

TIGHTLY. adv. [from tight.]

Hold, tirah, bear you these letters tightly;
Sail like my pinnace to these golden shores. Shak.
Handle your pruning-knife with dexterity: tightly, I say, go tightly to your business; you have cost me much. Dryden.

TIGHTNESS. n. f. [from tight.]

1. Closeness; not looseness.

The bones are inflexible; which arises from the greatness of the number of corpuscles that compose them, and the firmness and tightness of their union. Woodward on Fishes.

2. Neatness.

TIGRESS. n. f. [from tiger.] The female of the tiger.

It is reported of the tigress, that several spots rise in her skin when she is angry. Addison.

TIKE. n. f. [tik, Swedish; teke Dutch; tique, Fr.]

1. The loue of dogs or sheep. See TICK.

Lice and tiks are bred by the sweat close kept, and somewhat asched by the sun. Bacon Nat. Hist.

2. It is in Shakespeare the name of a dog, in which sense it is used in Scotland. [from tyt, Runick, a little dog.]

Avaunt, you curs!

Hound or spaniel, braché or lym,
Or bobtail tike, or trundle-tail. Shakesp. King Lear.

TILE. n. f. [tegle, Saxon; tegel, Dutch; tuile, Fr. tegola, Italian.] Thin plates of baked clay used to cover houses.

The roof is all tile, or lead, or stone.

Bacon's Natural History.

Earth turned into brick serveth for building as stone doth; and the like of tile. Bacon's Physic. Rem.
In at the window he climbs, or o'er the tiles.

Milton.

Worse than all the clattering tiles, and worse,
Than thousand padders was the poet's curse. Dryden.

Tile pins made of oak, or fir, they drive into holes made in the plain tiles, to hang them upon their lathing. Moxon.

To TILE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with tiles.

Moss groweth chiefly upon ridges of houses tiled or thatched. Bacon's Natural History.

Sonnets or elegies to Chloirs

Might raise a house above two stories;

A tile one would state, a catch

Would tile, an epigram would thatch.

Swift's Miscellanies.

2. To cover as tiles.

The rafters of my body, bone,
Being still with you, the muscle, sinew and vein,
Which tile this house, will come again. Donne.

TILLER. n. f. [tuller, Fr. from tile.] One whose trade is to cover houses with tiles.

A Flemish tiler, falling from the top of a house upon a Spaniard, killed him; the next of the blood executed his death, when he was offered pecuniary recompense, not that he would serve him but his talents: whereupon the judge said to him, he should go up to the top of the house, and then fall down upon the tiler. Bacon's Apophthegms.

TILING. n. f. [from tile.] The roof covered with tiles.

They went upon the house-top, and let him pass through the tiling with his couch before Jesus. Luke, v. 19.

Pleasure not known till now. Milton.

TILL then. To that time.

The earth till then was desert. Milton.

TILL. conj.

1. To the time when.

Woods and rocks had ears

To rapture, till the savage clamour drown'd

Both harp and voice. Milton.

The unity of place we neither find in Aristotle, Horace, or any who have written of it, till in our age the French poets first made it a precept of the stage. Dryden.

2. To the degree that.

Meditate to long till you make some act of prayer to God, or glorification of him. Taylor.

To this strange pitch their high assertions flew,
Till Nature's self scarce look'd on them as two. Cowley.

Goddeff, spread thy reign till 16s' elders reach. Pope.

To TILL. v. a. [tyllan, Saxon; tenlen, Dutch.] To cultivate; to husband: commonly used of the husbandry of the plow.

This paradise I give thee, count it thine,

To til, and keep, and of the fruit to eat. Milton.

Send him from the garden forth, to til

The ground whence he was taken. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The husbandman tilleth the ground, is employed in an honest business that is necessary in life, and very capable of being made an acceptable service unto God. Lavo.

TILLABLE. adj. [from till.] Arable; fit for the plow.

The tilable fields are so hilly, that the oxen can hardly take sure footing. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

TILLAGE. n. f. [from till.] Husbandry; the act or practice of plowing or culture.

Tillage will enable the kingdom for corn for the natives, and to spare for exportation. Bacon.

A tawny reape, from his tillage brought

First-fruits, the green ear, and the yellow sheaf. Milton.

Incite them to improve the tillage of their country, to recover the bad soil, and to remedy the waste. Milton.

Bid the laborious hind,
Whose harden'd hands do long in tillage toil,

Neglect the promis'd harvest of the soil. Dryden.

That there was tillage, Moles intimates; but whether bestowed on all, or only upon some parts of that earth, as also what sort of tillage that was, is not expressed. Woodward.

TILLER. n. f. [from till.]

1. Husbandman; ploughman.

They bring in sea-land partly after their nearness to the places, and partly by the good husbandry of the tiller. Carew.

Abel was a keeper of sheep, but Cain was a tiller of the ground. Genesis, iv. 2.

The worm that knows the ripening fruit, sad guest!

Canker or locust hurtful to insect

The blade; while huffs elude the tiller's care,

And eminence of want distinguishes the year. Prior.

2. The rudder of a boat.

The horse that goes in the thill. Properly TILLER.

4. A till; a small drawer.

Search her cabinet, and thou shalt find

Each tiller there with love epistles lin'd. Dry. Jew.

Makes husband and hufwife their coffers to fill. Tuffer.

TILT. n. f. [tylb, Saxon.]

1. A tent; any support of covering over head.

The roof of Innem

Intended for a shelter!

But the rain made an ass

Of tilt and canvas,

And the snow which you know is a melter. Deub.

2. The cover of a boat.

It is a small vessel, like in proportion to a Grave-end tilt-boat. Sandys.

The rowing crew,

To tempt a fare, clothe all their tilts in blue. Gay.

3. A military game at which the combatants run against each other with lances on horseback.

His study is his tilt-yard, and his loves

Are brazen images of canonized saints. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

He talks as familiarly of John of Gaunt, as if he had been sworn brother to him; and he never saw him but once in the tilt-yard, and then he broke his head. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Images representing the forms of Hercules, Apollo, and Diana, he placed in the tilt-yard at Constantinople. Knolles.

The spouses of Hippolite the queen,
What tilts and tourneys at the feast were seen. Dryden.

In tilts and tournaments the valiant strove
By glorious deeds to purchase Emma's love. Prior.

His majesty seldom dismissed the foreigner till he had entertained him with the slaughter of two or three of his liege subjects, whom he very dextrously put to death with the tilt of his lance. Addison's Freeholder.

5. Inclination forward; as, the vessel is a tilt, when it is inclined that the liquor may run out.

To TILT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover like a tilt of a boat.

Ajax interpos'd

His sevenfold shield, and screen'd Laertes' son,

When the insulting Trojans urg'd him fore

With tilted spears. Philips.

2. To point as in tilts.

Now horrid slaughter reigns:

Sons against fathers tilt the fatal lance,

Careless of duty, and their native grounds

Distain with kindred blood. Philips.

3. [Tillen, Dutch.] To turn up so as to run out; as, the barrel is tilted; that is, leaned forward.

To TILT. v. n.

1. To run in tilts or tournaments.

To describe races and games,

Or tilting furniture, emblazon'd shields. Milton.

2. To fight with rapiers.

Friends all but even now; and then, but now—
Swords out and tilting one at other's breasts,
In opposition bloody. Shakespeare's Othello.

Scow'ring the watch grows out of fashion wit:
Now we set up for tilting in the pit,

Where 'tis agreed by bullies, chicken-hearted,

To fright the ladies first, and then be parted. Dryden.

It is not yet the fashion for women of quality to tilt. Collier.

Satire's

- Satire's my weapon, but I'm too discreet
To run a muck, and tilt at all I meet. Pope.
3. To rush as in combat.
Some say the spirits tilt so violently, that they make holes where they strike. Collier.
4. To play unsteadily.
The floating vessel swam Uplifted; and secure with beaked prow
Rode tilting o'er the waves. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The fleet swift tilting o'er the surges flew,
Till Grecian cliffs appear'd. Pope's Odyssey.
5. To fall on one side.
As the trunk of the body is kept from tilting forward by the muscles of the back, so from falling backward by those of the belly. Grew's Cofin.
- TILTER. n. f. [from tilt.] One who tilts; one who fights.
A puiſny tilter, that spurs his horse on one side, breaks his staff like a noble goose.
Shakespeare's As you like it.
He us'd the only antique philters,
Deriv'd from old heroick tilters. Hudibras.
If war you chuse, and blood must needs be spilt
here,
Let me alone to match your tilter. Granville.
- TILTH. n. f. [from tilt.] Husbandry; culture.
Bourn, bound of land, tilth, vineyard, none;
No use of metal, corn, or wine, or oil.
Shakespeare's Tempst.

Drayton.
Her plenteous womb
Expresseth its full tilth and husbandry. Shakeſp.
- TILTH. adj. [from tilt.] Arable; tilled.
I know not how this word can be so used.
He beheld a field,
Part arable and tilth; whereon were sheaves
New reap'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.
- TIMBER. n. f. [tymbuan, Sax. to build.]
1. Wood fit for building.
I learn'd of lighter timber cotes to frame,
Such as might save my sheep and me from shame.
Spenser.
For the body of the ships no nation doth equal England for the oaken timber wherewith to build them, but there must be a great providence used, that our ship timber be not unnecessarily wasted.
Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
The straw was laid below,
Of chips and serewood was the second row;
The third of greens, and timber newly fell'd.
Dryden.
There are hardly any countries that are destitute of timber of their own growth. Woodward.
Upon these walls they plant quick and timber trees, which thrive exceedingly. Mortimer's Husb.
Who set the twigs, shall he remember,
That in haste to sell the timber?
And what shall of thy woods remain,
Except the box that threw the main? Prior.
2. The main trunk of a tree.
We take
From every tree, lop, bark, and part o' th' timber;
And though we leave it with a root thus luct,
The air will drink the sap. Shakeſpeare.
3. The main beams of a fabrick.
4. Materials, ironically.
Such dispositions are the very errors of human nature; and yet they are the fittest timber to make politics of, like to knee timber, that is good for ships to be tossed, but not for houses that shall stand firm. Bacon.
- To TIMBER. v. n. [from the noun.] To light on a tree. A cant word.
The one took up in a thicket of brush-wood,
and the other timbered upon a tree hard by. L. Eſſ.
- To TIMBER. v. a. To furnish with beams or timber.
TIMBERED. adj. [from timber; timbré,
Fr.] Built; formed; contrived.
He left the succession to his second son; not be-

- cause he thought him the best timbered to support
it. Wotton.
Many heads that undertake learning, were never squared nor timbered for it. Bacon's Vulgar Err.
- TIMBERSOW. n. f. A worm in wood;
Perhaps the wood louse.
Divers creatures, though they be loathsome to take, are of this kind; as earth worms, timber- foxes, snails. Bacon.
- TIMBREL. n. f. [timbre, Fr. tympnum, Lat.] A kind of musical instrument played by pulsation.
The damfels they delight
When they their timbrels smite,
And thereunto dance and carrol sweet.
Spenser's Epithal.
In their hands sweet timbrels all upheld on high.
Spenser.
Praise with timbrels, organs, flutes;
Praise with violins and lutes. Sandys's Paraph.
For her, through Egypt's fruitful clime renown'd,
Let weeping Nilus hear the timbral found.
Pope's Statius.
- TIME. n. f. [tima, Saxon; tym, Erſe.]
1. The measure of duration.
This consideration of duration, as set out by certain periods, and marked by certain measures or epochas, is that which most properly we call time.
Locke.
Time is like a fashionable host,
That slightly shakes his parting guest by th' hand,
But with his arms out-stretch'd, as he would fly, Grasps the incomer. Shakeſp. Troilus and Cressida.
Come what come may,
Time and the hour runs through the roughest day.
Shakeſpeare.
Nor will polished amber, although it send forth a gross exhalation, be found a long time defective upon the exactest scale. Bacon's Vulgar Errours.
Time, which consisteth of parts, can be no part of infinite duration, or of eternity, for then there would be infinite time past to-day, which tomorrow will be more than infinite. Time is one thing, and infinite duration is another. Grew.
2. Space of time.
Daniel desired that he would give him time, and that he would shew him the interpretation.
Daniel, ii. 16.
It a law be enacted to continue for a certain time, when that time is elapsed, the law ceaseth without any farther abrogation. White.
He for the time remain'd stupidly good. Milton.
No time is allowed for digestions. Swift.
3. Interval.
Pomanders, and knots of powders, you may have continually in your hand; whereas perfumes you can take but at times. Bacon's Natural History.
4. Lite considered as employed, or destined to employment.
A great devourer of his time, was his agency for men of quality. Fell.
All ways of holy living, all instances and all kinds of virtue, lie open to those who are masters of themselves, their time, and their fortune. Law.
5. Season; proper time.
To every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose. Eccles. iii. 1.
They were cut down out of time, whose foundation was overflown with a flood. Job, xxii. 16.
He found nothing but leaves on it; for the time of figs was not yet. Mark, xi. 13.
Knowing the time, that it is high time to awake out of sleep. Romans, xiii. 11.
Short were her marriage joys; for in the prime
Of youth her load expired before his time. Dryd.
I hope I come in time, if not to make,
At least to save, your fortune and your honour.
Dryden.
The time will come when we shall be forced to bring our eyes to remembrance, and then consideration will do us little good. Galamy's Sermons.
6. A considerable space of duration; continuance; process of time.

- Fight under him, there's plunder to be had;
A captain is a very gainful trade:
And when in service your best days are spent,
In time you may command a regiment.
Dryden's Juvenal.
In time the mind reflects on its own operations about the ideas got by sensation, and thereby stores itself with a new set of ideas, ideas of reflection.
Locke.
One imagines, that the terrestrial matter which is showered down along with rain enlarges the bulk of the earth, and that it will in time bury all things under ground. Woodward.
I have resolv'd to take time, and, in spite of all misfortunes, to write you, at intervals, a long letter. Swift.
7. Age; part of duration distinct from other parts.
They shall be given into his hand until a time and times. Dan. vii. 25.
If we should impute the heat of the season unto the co-operation of any stars with the sun, it seems more favourable for our times to ascribe the same unto the constellation of Leo. Bacon's Vulgar Errours.
The way to please being to imitate nature, the poets and the painters, in ancient times, and in the best ages, have studied her. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
8. Past time.
I was the man in the moon when time was.
Shakeſpeare.
9. Early time.
Stanley at Bosworth-field, though he came time enough to save his life, yet he staid long enough to endanger it. Bacon.
If they acknowledge repentance and a more strict obedience to be one time or other necessary, they imagine it is time enough yet to set about these do-ties. Rogers.
10. Time considered as affording opportunity.
The earl lost no time; but marched day and night.
Clarendon.
He continued his delights till all the enemies horse were passed through his quarters; nor did then pursue them in any time. Clarendon.
I would ask any man that means to repent at his death, how he knows he shall have an hour's time for it? Duty of Man.
Time is lost, which never will renew,
While we too far the pleasing path pursue,
Surveying nature. Dryden's Virgil.
11. Particular quality of some part of duration.
Comets, importing change of times and states,
Brandish your crystal tresses in the sky. Shakeſp.
All the prophets in their age, the times
Of great Messiah sing. Milton's Paradise Lost.
It any reply, that the times and manners of men will not bear such a practice, that is an answer from the mouth of a professed time-server. South.
12. Particular time.
Give order, that no sort of person
Have, any time, recourse unto the princes. Shak.
When that company died, what time the fire devoured two hundred and fifty men.
Numbers, xxvi. 10.
The worst on me must light, when time shall be.
Milton.
A time will come, when my maturer muse
In Cæsar's wars a nobler theme shall chuse. Dryd.
These reservoirs of snow they cut, distributing them to several shops, that from time to time supply Naples. Addison.
13. Hour of childbirth.
She intended to stay till delivered; for she was within one month of her time. Clarendon.
The first time I saw a lady dressed in one of these petticoats, I blamed her for walking abroad when she was so near her time; but soon I found all the modish part of the sex as far gone as herself.
Addison's Spectator.
14. Repetition of any thing, or mention with reference to repetition.

Four times he cross'd the car of night. Milton.
Many times I have read of the like attempts begin, but never of any finished. Heylyn.

Every single particle would have a sphere of void space around it many hundred thousand million million times bigger than the dimensions of that particle. Bentley.

Lord Oxford, I have now the third time mentioned in this letter, expects you. Swift.

15. Musical measure.

Musick do I hear!
Ha, ha! keep time. How four sweet musick is When time is broke, and no proportion kept!
Shakespeare.

You by the help of tune and time
Can make that long which was but rhyme.
Waller.

On their exalted wings
To the celestial orbs they climb,
And with th' harmonious spheres keep time.
Denham.

Heroes who o'ercome, or die,
Have their hearts hung extremely high;
The strings of which in battle's heat
Against their very costlets beat;
Keep time with their own trumpet's measure,
And yield them most excessive pleasure. Prior.

To TIME. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To adapt to the time; to bring or do at a proper time.

There is no greater wisdom than well to time the beginnings and onsets of things.

It is hard to believe, that where his most numerous miracles were afforded, they should all want the advantage of the congruous timings to give them their due weight and efficacy. Hammond.

The timing of things is a main point in the dispatch of all affairs. L'Estrange.

This 'tis to have a virtue out of season:
Mercy is good, but kings mistake its timing. Dryd.
A man's conviction should be strong, and so well timed, that worldly advantages may seem to have no share in it. Addison.

2. To regulate as to time.

To the same purpose old Hippocres spoke,
Who overlook'd the oars, and tim'd the stroke.
Addison.

3. To measure harmonically.

He was a thing of blood, whose every motion
Was tim'd with dying cries. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

TIM'EFUL. adj. [time and full.] Seasonable; timely; early.

If this arch-politician had in his pupils any remorse, any feeling of God's future judgments, he persuades them that God hath so great need of men's souls, that he will accept them at any time, and upon any condition; interrupting, by his vigilant endeavours, all other of tim'd return towards God. Ralph's History of the World.

TIM'ELINESS. adj. [from time.]

1. Unseasonable; done at an improper time.

Not fits it to produce the heavenly feast Timely, indecent, but return to rest. P. p. s. Ode.

ness; habitual cowardice.

The hare figur'd pusillanimity and timidity from its temper. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TIM'OROUS. adj. [timor, Latin.] Fearful;

full of fear and scruple.

Piepossessed heads will ever doubt it, and ti-morous beliefs will never dare to try it.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The infant flames, whilst yet they were conceal'd
In the dusky doubts, with pity I beheld;

With easy smiles dispell'd the silent fear,

That durst not tell me what I dy'd to hear. Prior.

TIM'OROUSLY. adv. [from timorous.]

Fearfully; with much fear.

We would have had you heard

The traitor speak, and tim'rously confess

The manner and the purpose of his treasons. Shakespeare.

Though they had ideas enough to distinguish gold from a stone, and metal from wood, yet they but tim'rously ventured on such terms which should pretend to signify their real offices. Locke.

Let dastard souls be tim'rously wise:

But tell them, Pearson knows not how to form

Far-fancy'd ill, and dangers out of fight.

A. Phillips.

TIM'OROUSNESS. n. f. [from timorous.]

Fearfulness.

The clergy, through the timorousness of many among them, were refused to be heard by their council. Swift.

TIM'OUS. adj. [from time.] Early; timely;

of. Woodward.

To TINCT. v. a. [tinctus, Lat. teint, Fr.]

1. To stain; to colour; to spot; to die.

Some bodies have a more departible nature than others in colouration; for a small quantity of saffron will tint more than a very great quantity of wine.

Bacon.

Some were tinted blue, some red, others yellow.

Brown.

I distilled some of the tinted liquor, and all that came over was as limpid as rock water. Boyle.

Those who have preserved an innocence, would not suffer the whiter parts of their soul to be discoloured or tinted by the reflection of one sin.

Decay of Piety.

2. To imbue with a taste.

We have artificial wells made in imitation of the natural, as tinted upon vitriol, sulphur, and steel. Lacon.

The purple-breasted amethyst is thine. Thomson.

TIN'CTURE. n. f. [teinture, Fr. tinctura,

from tinctus, Lat.]

1. Colour or taste superadded by something.

The sight must be sweetly deceived by an inen-surable passage from bright colours to dimmer, which Italian artizans call the middle tinctures.

Wotton's Architecture.

Hence the morning planet gilds her horn,

By tincture or reflection they augment

Their small peculiar. Milton.

'Tis the fate of princes, that no knowledge

Come pure to them, but, passing through the eyes

And ears of other men, it takes a tincture

From every channel. Denham.

That beloved thing engrosses him, and, like a coloured glass before his eyes, casts its own colour and tincture upon all the images of things. South.

To begin the practice of an art with a light tin-ture of the rules, is to expose ourselves to the scorn of those who are judges. Dryden.

Malignant temper, whatever kind of life they are engaged in, will discover their natural tincture of mind. Addison.

Few in the next generation who will not write and read, and have an early tincture of religion.

Addison.

Sure of her joy, and source of her delight!

O! wing'd with pleasure, take thy happy flight,

And give each future morn a tincture of thy white.

Prior.

All manners take a tincture from our own,
Or come discolour'd through our passion shown.

Prior.

Have a care lest some darling science to thee prevail over your mind, as to give a tincture tincture to all your other studies, and discolour all your ideas. Watts.

2. Extract of some drug made in spirits.

In tincture drawn from vegetables, the superfluous spirit of wine distilled off, leaves the extract of the vegetable. Boyle.

To TIN'CTURE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To imbue or impregnate with some colour or taste.

The bright sun compacts the precious stone,
Imparting radiant lustre like his own;

He tinctures rubies with their rosy hue,
And on the sapphire spreads a heavenly blue.

Blackmore.

A little black paint will tincture and spoil twenty gay colours. Watts.

2. To imbue the mind.

Early were our minds tinctured with a distinguishing sense of good and evil; early were the seeds of a divine love, and holy zeal of offending, sown in our hearts. Atterbury.

To

To TIND. v. a. [tendgan, Gothick; tendan, Saxon.] To kindle; to set on fire.

TINDER. n. f. [tynbne, tendbne, Saxon.] Any thing eminently inflammable placed to catch fire.

Strike on the tinder, ho!
Give me a taper. Shakespeare's Othello.
To these shameless pastimes were their youth admitted, thereby adding, as it were, fire to tinder. Hakewill

Where sparks and fire do meet with tinder.
Those sparks more fire will still engender. Suck.
Whoever trading with England would hinder, To inflame both the nations do plainly conspire;
Because lush linen will soon turn to tinder, And wool it is greasy, and quickly takes fire. Swift.

TINDERBOX. n. f. [tinder and box.] The box for holding tinder.

That worthy patriot, once the bellows
And tinderbox of all his fellows. Hudibras.
He might even as well have employed his time in catching moles, making lanterns and tinderboxes. Atterbury.

TINE. n. f. [tinne, Islandick.]

1. The tooth of a harrow, the spike of a fork.

In the southern parts of England they destroy moles by traps that fall on them, and strike sharp tines or teeth through them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. Trouble; distress.

The tragical effect,
Vouchsafe, O thou the mournful't muse of nine,
That won'tst the tragick stage for to direct,
In funeral complaints and wailful tine. Spenser.

To TINE. v. a. [tynan, Saxon.]

1. To kindle; to light; to set on fire.

Strife's Atin in their stubborn mind
Coals of contention and hot vengeance tin'd. Spencer.
The clouds

Justling or push'd with winds, rude in their shock,
Tine the flant lightning; whose thwart flame driv'n down, Kindles the gummy bark of fir. Milton.

The priest with holy hands was seen to tine
The cloven wood, and pour the ruddy wine. Dryden.

2. [tinan, Saxon, to sbul.] To shut.

To TINE. v. n.

Of Scots and English both, that tin'd on his strand. Spenser.

To TINGE. v. a. [tingo, Lat.] To impregnate or imbue with a colour or taste.

Sir Roger is something of an humourist, and his virtues, as well as imperfections, are tinged by a certain extravagance, which makes them particularly his. Addison's Spectator.

A red powder mixed with a little blue, or a blue with a little red, doth not presently lose its colour; but a white powder mixed with any colour is presently tinged with that colour, and is equally capable of being ringed with any colour whatever. Newton's Opticks.

If the eye be tinged with any colour, as in the jaundice, so as to tinge pictures in the bottom of the eye with that colour, all objects appear tinged with the same colour. Newton.

She lays some useful bile aside,
To tinge the chyl's insipid tide;
Else we should want both gibe and satire,
And all be burst with pure good-nature. Prior.
The infusions of rhubarb and sassa tinge the urine with a high yellow. Arbutnot an Aliments

TINGENT. adj. [tingens, Lat.] Having the power to tinge.

This wood, by the tincture it afforded, appeared to have its coloured part genuine; but as for the white part, it appears much less enriched with the tingent property. Boyle.

TINGLASS. n. f. [tin and glass.] Bismuth.

To TINGLE. v. n. [tingelen, Dutch.]

1. To feel a sound, or the continuance of a sound, in the ears. This is perhaps rather tinkle.

The ears of them that hear it shall tingle. Bible
When our ear tingles, we usually say that some body is talking of us; which is an ancient conceit. Brown.

2. To feel a sharp quick pain with a sensation of motion.

The pale boy senator yet tingles stands. Pope

3. To feel either pain or pleasure with a sensation of motion. The sense of this word is not very well ascertained.

They suck pollution through their tingling veins. Tukel

In a palsy, sometimes the sensation or feeling is either totally abolished, or dull with a sense of tingling. Arbutnot.

To TINK. v. n. [tinnio, Lat. tincian, Welsh.] To make a sharp shrill noise.

TINKER. n. f. [from tink, because their way of proclaiming their trade is to beat a kettle, or because in their work they make a tinkling noise.] A mender of old brass.

Am not I old Sly's son, by education a card-maker, and now by present profession a tinker? Shakespeare.

My copper medals by the pound
May be with learned justice weigh'd:
To turn the balance, Otho's head
May be thrown in: and for the mettles,
The coin may mend a tinker's kettle. Prior.

To TINKLE. v. n. [tinter, Fr. tinnio, Lat.]

1. To make a sharp quick noise; to clink.

The daughters of Zion are haughty, and walk with stretched out necks, making a tinkling with their feet. Isaiah.

His feeble hand a javelin threw,
Which flutt'ring, seem'd to loiter as it flew;
Just, and but barely, to the mark it held,
And faintly tinkled on the brazen shield. Dryden's Æneid.

The sprightly horse
Moves to the music of his tinkling bells. Doddley.

2. It seems to have been improperly used by Pope.

The wand'ring streams that shine between the hills,

The grots that echo to the tinkling rills. Pope.

3. To hear a low quick noise.

With deeper brown the groove was overspread,
A sudden horror seiz'd his giddy head,
And his ears tinkled, and the colour fled. Dryden.

TINMAN. n. f. [tin and man.] A manufacturer of tin, or iron tinned over.

Dist thou never pop
Thy head into a tinman's shop? Prior.

TINNER. n. f. [from tin; tin, Saxon.] One who works in the tin mines.

The Cornish tinner, many of them could for a need live under ground, that were *tinner*s. Bacon's Henry VII.

Those arms of sea that thrust into the tinny strand. Drayton.

TINPENNY. n. f. A certain customary duty anciently paid to the tithingmen.

Bailey.

TINSEL. n. f. [etincelle, Fr.]

1. A kind of shining cloth.

A *tinse*l veil her amber locks did shroud,
That strove to cover what it could not hide. Fairf.

It's but a night-gown in respect of yours; cloth of gold and cuts, underborne with a bluish *tinse*l. Shakespeare.

By Thetis' *tinse*l slipper'd feet,
And the songs of sirens sweet. Milton.

2. Any thing shining with false lustre; any thing shewy and of little value.

For favours cheap and common who would strive?
Yet flatter'd here and there I some behold,
Who can discern the *tinse*l from the gold. Dryden.

If the man will too curiously examine the superficial *tinse*l good, he undecives himself to his own cost. Norris.

No glitt'ring *tinse*l of May-fair
Could with this rod of Sid compare. Swift.

Ye *tinse*l insects, whom a court maintains,
That counts your beauties only by your stains,
Spin all your cobwebs 'er the eyes of day,
The *tinse*l's wing shall brush you all away. Pope.

To TINSEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To decorate with cheap ornaments; to adorn with lustre that has no value.

Hence, you phantastick posturers in song,
My text defeats your art, 'tis Nature's tongue,
Scorns all her *tinse*l'd metaphors of self,
Illustrated by nothing but herself. Cleveland.

She, *tinse*l'd o'er in robes of varying hues,
With self-applause her wild creation views;
Sees momentary monsters rise and fall,
And with her own fool's colours gilds them all. Pope.

TINT. n. f. [tainte, Fr. tinta, Ital.] A dye; a colour.

Whether thy hand strike out some free design,
Where life awakes, and dawns at ev'ry line;
Or blend in beauteous tint the colour'd mass,
And from the canvas call the mimic face. Pope.

The virtues of most men will only blow,
Like coy auriculars, in Alpine snow:
Transplant them to the equinoctial line,
Their vigour sickens, and their tints decline. Harte.

Though it be allowed that elaborate harmony of colouring, a brilliancy of tints, a soft and gradual transition from one to another, present not to the eye what an harmonious concert of music does to the ear; it must be remembered, that painting is not merely a gratification of sight. Rylands.

TINWORM. n. f. An insect. Bailey.

TINY. adj. [tiny, tynd, Danish.] Little; small; puny. A burlesque word.

Any pretty little tiny kickshaws. Shak. Hen. IV.

When that I was a little tiny boy,
A foolish thing was but a toy. Shak. Tw. Night.

But ah! I fear thy little fancy roves
On little females, and on little loves;
Thy pigmy children, and thy tiny spouse,
The baby playthings that adorn thy house. Swift.

TIP. n. f. [tip, tipken, Dutch.] Top; end; point; extremity.

The tip no jewel needs to wear,

The tip is jewel of the ear. Sidney.

They touch the beard with the tip of their tongue, and wet it. Bacon's Natural History.

Thrice upon thy fingers tip,

Thrice upon thy rubied lip. Milton.

All the pleasure dwells upon the tip of his tongue. South.

She has fifty private amours, which nobody yet knows any thing of but herself, and thirty clandestine marriages, that have not been touched by the tip of the tongue. Addison.

I no longer look upon lord Plausible as ridiculous, for admitting a lady's fine tip of an ear and pretty elbow. Pope.

To TIP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To top; to end; to cover on the end.

In his hand a reed

Stood waving, tip'd with fire. Milton's Par. Lost.

With truncheon tip'd with iron head,

The warrior to the lists he led. Hudibras.

How would the old king smile

To see you weigh the paws, when tip'd with gold,

And throw the shaggy spoils about your shoulders! Addison.

Quarto's, eel-like shape the left-wing pyre,
And left a little Ajax tips the spire. Pope's Dunciad.
Behold the place, where if a poet
Shin'd in description, he might show it;
'Till how the moon-beam trembling falls,
And tips with silver all the walls. Pope's Horace.
Tip with jet,
Fair ermines spotted as the snows they press. Thomson.

z. To strike slightly; to tap.

She writes love-letters to the youth in grace,
Nay, tips the wink before the cuckold's face. Dryden.

The pert jockanapea tipped me the wink,
And put out his tongue at his grandfather. Tatler.
A third rogue tips me by the elbow. Swift.

Their judgment was, upon the whole,
'That lady is the dullest soul;
Then tip their forehead in a jeer,
As who should say, she wants it here. Swift.

When I saw the keeper frown,
Tipping him with half a crown,
Now, said I, we are alone,
Name your heroes one by one. Swift.

TIPPET. n. f. [tæppet, Sax.] Something worn about the neck.

His turban was white, with a small red cross on the top; he had also a tippet of fine linen. Bacon
To TIPPLE. v. n. [tepel, a dug, old Teutonick.] To drink luxuriously; to waste life over the cup.

Let us grant it is not amiss to sit,
And keep the turn of tipping with a slave,
To reel the streets at noon. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

To TIPPLE. v. a. To drink in luxury or excess.

While his canting drone-pipe scann'd
The mystic figures of her hand,
He tipples palmistry, and dines
On all her fortune-telling lines. Cleaveland.
To a short meal he makes a tedious grace,
Before the barley-pudding comes in place;
Then bids fall on; himself for saving charges
A peck'd slice'd onion eats, and tipples verjuice. Dryden.

If a slumber haply does invade
My weary limbs, my fancy's still awake,
Thoughtful of drink, and eager, in a dream,
Tipples imaginary pots of ale. Philips.

TIPPLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Drink; liquor.

While the tipple was paid for, all went merrily on. L'Estrange.

TIPPLED. adj. [from tipple.] Tipsy; drunk.

Merry, we fall from the east,
Halt tippled at a rainbow feast. Dryden.

TIPPLEK. n. f. [from tipple.] A sottish drunkard; an idle drunken fellow.

TIPSTAFF. n. f. [tip and staff.]

1. An officer with a staff tipped with metal.

2. The staff itself so tipped.

One had in his hand a staff of a yellow cane, tipped at both ends with blue. Bacon.

TIPSY. adj. [from tipple.] Drunk; overpowered with excess of drink.

The riot of the tipsy bachelors,
Tearing the Thracian finger in their rage. Shak.
Welcome joy and feast,
Midnight shout and revelry,
Tipsy dance and jollity. Milton.

TIPTOE. n. f. [tip and toe.] The end of the toe.

Where she fondly appears himself appearing high,
Upon his tip-toes stalketh stately by. Spenser's Hybberd's Tale.

He that outlives this day, and comes safe home,
Will stand a tip-toe when this day is nam'd,
And rouse him at the name of Crispian. Shakespeare.

Night's candles are burnt out, and jocund day Stands tip-toe on the misty mountains' tops. Shak.

Religion stands on tip-toes in our land,
Ready to pass to the American strand. Herbert.
Ten ruddy wildings in the wood I found,
And stood on tip-toes from the ground. Dryden.

TIRE. n. f. [tyr, Dutch.]

1. Rank; row. Sometimes written tier.
Your lowest tier of ordnance must lie snar foot clear above water, when all loading is in, or else those your best pieces will be of small use at sea, in any grown weather that makes the billows to rise. Raleigh's Essays.

Stood rank'd of seraphim another row,
In posture to displace their second tier
Of thunder. Milton's Paradise Lost.
In all those wars there were few tiermes, most of them being of one tier of pairs of fifty banks. Arbutnot.

2. [Corrupted from tiar or tiara, or from attire.] A head-dress.

On her head she wore a tier of gold,
Adorn'd with gems and ocheres. Spenser.
Here is her picture: let me see;
If I had such a tier, this face of mine
Were full as lovely as is this of hers. Shakespeare.
The judge of torments, and the king of tears,
Now fills a burnish'd throne of quenechais fire,
And for his old fair robes of light he wears
A gloomy mantle of dark flames; the tier,
That crowns his hated head, on high appears. Crashaw.

When the fury took her stand on high,
A hiss from all the snaky tier went round. Pope.

3. Furniture; apparatus.

Saint George's worth
Enkindles like desire of high exploits;
Immediate sieges, and the tier of war
Rowl in thy eager mind. Philips.
When they first peep forth of the ground, they show their whole tier of leaves, then flowers, next seeds. Woodward.

To TIRE. v. a. [tyrian, Saxon.]

1. To fatigue; to make weary; to harass; to wear out with labour or tediousness.

Tired with toil, all hopes of safety past,
From pray'rs to wishes he descends at last. Dryden.
For this a hundred voices I desire,
To tell thee what a hundred tongues would tire;
Yet never could be worthily express'd.
How deeply thou art seated in my breast. Dryden's Persius.

2. It has often est added, to intend the signification.

Often a few that are stiff do tire out a greater number that are more moderate. Bacon's Essays.
A lonely way
The cheerless Albion wander'd half a day;
Tire'd out, at length a spreading stream he spy'd. Tickel.

3. [From attire or tire, from tiara.] To dress the head.

Jezebel painted her face, and tired her head. a Kings, 16. 30.

To TIRE. v. n. [tyonian, Saxon.] To fail with weariness.

TIREDDNESS. n. f. [from tired.] State of being tired; weariness.

It is not through the tiredness of the age of the earth, but through our own negligence, that it hath not satisfied us bountifully. Hakewill on Providence.

TIREDSOME. adj. [from tire.] Wearisome; fatiguing; tedious.

Since the inculcating precept upon precept will prove tiresome to the reader, the poet must sometimes relieve the subject with a pleasant and pertinent dis-gression. Addison.

Nothing is so tiresome as the works of those cri-ticks who write in a dogmatick way, without language, genius, or imagination. Addison.

TIREDSOMENESS. n. f. [from tiresome.] A want of quality of being tiresome.

TIREWOMAN. n. f. [tire and woman.] A woman whose business is to make dresses for the head.

Why should they not value themselves for this outside fashionableness of the tirewoman's making, when their parents have so early instructed them to do so? Luche on Education.

TIRINGHOUSE. } n. f. [tire and house, or TIRINGROOM. } room] The room in which players dress for the stage.

This green plot shall be our stage, this hawthorn brake our tiringhouse. Shakespeare.
Man's life's a tragedy; his mother's womb,
From which he enters, is the tiringroom;
This spacious earth the theatre, and the stage
That country which he lives in; passions, rage,
Folly, and vice, are actors. Wotton.

TIRWIT. n. f. [vanellus, Lat.] A bird

'Tis, contracted for it is.
'Tis destiny unthuntable. Shakespeare.

To Italy. Shakespeare's Richard II.

TOLL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Labour; fatigue.

They live to their great both toil and grief,
where the blasphemies of Ariens are renewed. Hosker.

Not to irksome toil, but to delight
He made us. Milton.

The love of praise, how'er conceal'd by art,
Reigns more or less, and glows in ev'ry heart;
The proud to gain it toils and toils endure,
The modest shun it, but to make it sure. Toung.

2. [Toile, toilet, Fr. toila, Latin.] Any net or snare woven or method.

She looks like sleep,
As she would catch another Antony
In her strong toil of grace. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

TOL

He had so placed his horsemen and footmen in the woods, that he shut up the Christians as it were in a toil. Kneller.

All great spirits
Bear great and sudden change with such impatience
As a Numidian lion, when first caught, Endures the toil that holds him. Denham's Sophy.
A fly falls into the toil of a spider. L'Estrange.

TOL-ERANCE. n. f. [tolerantia, Latin; tolerance, Fr.] Power of enduring; act of enduring. Not used, though a good word.

Diogenes one frosty morning came into the market-place shaking, to shew his tolerance; many of the people came about him, pitying him: Plato passing by, and knowing he did it to be seen, said, If you pity him indeed, let him alone to himself. Bacon's Apophthegms.

There wants nothing but consideration of our own eternal weal, a tolerance or endurance of being made happy here, and blessed eternally. Hammond's Fundamentals.

TO-L-ERATE. v. a. [tolero, Lat. tolerare, Fr.] To allow so as not to hinder; to suffer; to pass uncondemned.

Inasmuch as they did resolve to remove only such things of that kind as the church might best spare, retaining the residue; their whole counsel is, in this point, utterly condemned, as having either proceeded from the blindness of those times, or from negligence, or from desire of honour and glory, or from an erroneous opinion that such things might be tolerated for a while. Hooker.

We shall see the flying horses, harpies, and satyrs; for these are poetical fancies, whose shaded moralities require their substantial falsities. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Men should not tolerate themselves one minute in any known sin. Decay of Piety.

Crying should not be tolerated in children. Locke.
We are fully convinced that we shall always tolerate them, but not that they will tolerate us. Swift.

TOL-ERATION. n. f. [tolero, Lat.] Allowance given to that which is not approved.

I shall not speak against the indulgence and toleration granted to these men. South.

TOLL. n. f. [This word seems derived from tollo, Lat. toll, Sax. tol, Dutch; told, Danish; toll, Welch; taillie, Fr.] An excise of goods; a seizure of some part for permission of the rest.

Toll, in law, has two significations: first, a liberty to buy and sell within the precincts of a manor, which seems to import as much as a fair or market; secondly, a tribute or custom paid for passage. Cowell.

Empton and Dudley the people esteemed as his horse-leeches, bold men, that took toll of their master's gift. Bacon.

The same Prussians joined with the Rhodians against the Byzantines, and stopped them from levying the toll upon their trade into the Euxine. Arbutnot.

TO TOLL. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To pay toll or tallage.

TOM

I will buy me a son-in-law in a fair, and toll for him: for this, I'll none of him.

Shakspeare's All's well that ends well.
Where, when, by whom, and what y' were sold for, And in the open market toll'd for? Hudibras.

2. To take toll or tallage.

The meale the more yeeldeth, if servant be true, And miller that tolleth takes none but his due. Tusser.

3. [I know not whence derived.] To found as a single bell.

The first bringer of unwelcome news Hath but a losing office; and his tongue Sounds ever after as a fullen bell, Remember'd tolling a departed friend.

Shakspeare's Henry IV.
Our going to church at the tolling of a bell, only tells us the time when we ought to go to worship God. Stillingfleet.

Toll, toll,
Gentle bell, for the soul
Of the pure ones. Denham.

You love to hear of some prodigious tale,
The bell that toll'd alone, or Irish whale. Dryden.
They give their bodies due repose at night;
When hollow murmurs of their evening bells
Dismiss the sleepy swains, and toll them to their cells. Dryden.

With horns and trumpets now to madnes swell,
Now sink in sorrows with a tolling bell. Pope's Dunciad.

TO TOLL. v. a. [tollo, Lat.]

1. To ring a bell.

When any one dies, then by tolling or ringing of a bell the same is known to the searchers. Craunt.

2. To take away; to vacate; to annul. A term only used in the civil law: in this sense the o is short, in the former long.

An appeal from sentence of excommunication does not suspend it, but then devolves it to a superior judge, and tolls the presumption in favour of a sentence. Ayliffe.

3. To take away, or perhaps to invite. Obsolete.

The adventitious moisture which hangeth loose in a body, betrayeth and tolleth forth the innate and radical moisture along with it. Bacon's Natural History.

They move per latera, that is, two legs of one side together, which is tolutation or ambling. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

They rode; but authors having not Determin'd whether pace or trot,
That is to say, whether tolutation,
As they do term 't, or succussion,
We leave it. Hudibras.

TOMB. n. f. [tombe, tombeau, Fr. tumba, low Latin.] A monument in which the dead are enclosed.

Metaphors, I see thee, now thou art below,
As one dead in the bottom of a tomb. Shakspeare.
Time is drawn upon tombs: an old man bald,
Winged, with a fiddle and an hour-glass. Peacham on Drawing.

Poor heart! she slumbers in her silent tomb;
Let her possess in peace that narrow room. Dryden.
The

The secret wound with which I bleed
Shalt I wear up, ev'n in my harle;
Is it on my tomb-stone thou shalt read
My answer to thy dubious verse. Prior.
To TOMB. v. a. [from the noun.] To bury; to entomb.

Souls of boys were there,
And youths that tomb'd before their parents were. May.

To MBLESS. adj. [from tomb.] Wanting a tomb; wanting a sepulchral monument.

Lay these bones in an unworthy urn,
Tombless, with no remembrance over them. Shak.

To MBOY. n. f. [Tom, a diminutive of Thomas, and boy.] A mean fellow;
sometimes a wild coarse girl.

A lady
Fasten'd to an empery, to be partner'd
With tom boys, hir'd with that self-exhibition
Which your own coifers yield! Shaksp. Cymbeline.

TOME. n. f. [French; tome.]

1. One volume of many.

2. A book.

All those venerable books of scripture, all those sacred tomes and volumes of holy writ, are with such absolute perfection framed. Hooker.

TOMTIT. n. f. [See TITMOUSE.] A titmouse; a small bird.

You would fancy him a giant when you looked upon him, and a tomtit when you shut your eyes. Spettator.

TON. n. f. [tonne, Fr. See TUN.] A measure or weight.

Spain was very weak at home, or very slow to move, when they suffered a small fleet of English to fire, sink, and carry away, ten thousand ton of their great shipping. Bacon.

TON. } In the names of places, are de-TUN. } rived from the Saxon tun, a hedge or wall; and this seems to be from dun, a hill, the towns being anciently built on hills, for the sake of defence and protection in times of war.

Gibson's Camden.

TONE. n. f. [ton, Fr. tonus, Lat.]

1. Note; sound.

Sounds called tones are ever equal.

Bacon's Natural History.
The strength of a voice or sound makes a difference in the loudness or softness, but not in the tone.

Bacon's Natural History.
In their motions harmony divine
So smooths her charming tones, that God's own ear Listens delighted. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Accent; sound of the voice.

Palamon replies,
Eager his tone, and ardent were his eyes. Dryden.
Each has a little soul he calls his own,
And each enunciates with a human tone. Harte.

3. A whine; a mournful cry.

Made children, with your tones, to run for 't,
As bad as bloody-bones, or Lunsford. Hudibras.

4. A particular or affected sound in speaking.

5. Elasticity; power of extension and contraction.

Drinking too great quantities of this decoction, may weaken the tone of the stomach. Arbutnot.

TONG. n. f. [See TONGUE.] The catch of a buckle. This word is usually written tongue; but, as its office is to hold, it has probably the same original with tongs, and should therefore have the same orthography.

Their hilts were burnish'd gold, and handle strong
Of mother pearl, and buckled with a golden tong.
Spenser.

TONGS. n. f. [tang, Saxon; tang, Dut.]

An instrument by which hold is taken of any thing; as of coals in the fire.

Another did the dying brand repair
With iron tongs, and sprinkled oft the same With liquid waves. Spenser.

They turn the glowing mass with crooked tongs.
The fiery work proceeds. Dryden's Æneid.

Get a pair of tongs like a smith's tongs, stronger, and toothed. Mortimer's Husbandry.

TONGUE. n. f. [tung, Sax. tonghe, Dut.]

1. The instrument of speech in human beings.

My conscience hath a thousand several tongues,
And every tongue brings in a several tale,
And every tale condemns me for a villain. Shak.

Who with the tongue of angels can relate? Milt.
They are tongue-valiant and as bold as Hercules where there's no danger. L'Estrange.

My ears still ring with noise; I'm vex'd to death,
Tongue-kill'd, and have not yet recovered breath.

Dryden.

Tongue-valiant hero, venter of thy might,
In threats the foremost; but the lag in fight.

Dryden.

There have been female Pythagoreans, notwithstanding that philosophy consisted in keeping a secret, and the disciple was to hold her tongue five years together. Addison's Guardian.

Though they have those sounds ready at their tongue's end, yet there are no determined ideas.

Locke.

I should make but a poor pretence to true learning, if I had not clear ideas under the words my tongue could pronounce. Watts on the Mind.

Much tongue and much judgment seldom go together; for talking and thinking are two quite different faculties. L'Estrange.

First in the council hall to steer the state,
And ever foremost in a tongue debate. Dryd. Æneid.

4. Power of articulate utterance.

Parrots, imitating human tongue,
And singing-birds in silver cages hung. Dryden.

5. Speech, as well or ill used.

Give me thy hand; I am sorry I beat thee;
but, while thou livest, keep a good tongue in thy head. Shakspere.

So brave a knight was Tydeus, of whom a sonne is sprung,

Inferiour farre in martiall deeds, though higher in his tongue. Chapman.

On evil days though fallen and evil tongues.
Milton.

6. A language.

The Lord shall bring a nation against thee, whose tongue thou shalt not understand.

Deut. xxvii. 49.

With wond'rous gifts endu'd,
To speak all tongues and do all miracles. Milton.

So well he understood the most and best
Of tongues that Babel sent into the west;
Spoke them so truly, that he had, you'd swear,
Not only liv'd, but been born ev'ry where. Cowley.

An acquaintance with the various tongues is nothing but a relief against the mischiefs which the building of Babel introduced. Watts.

7. Speech, as opposed to thoughts or action.

Let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth. 1 John, iii. 18.

8. A nation distinguished by their language. A scriptural term.

The Lord shall destroy the tongue of the Ægypt- ian sea. Isaiah.

collected, refused to be settled by act of parliament. Clarendon.

To NSIL. n. f. [tonfille, Fr. tonfille, Lat.]

Tonsils or almonds are two round glands placed on the sides of the basis of the tongue, under the common membrane of the fauces, with which they are covered; each of them hath a large oval sinus, which opens into the fauces, and in it there are a great number of lesser ones, which discharge themselves through the great sinus, of a mucous and slippery matter, into the fauces, larynx, and œsophagus, for the moistening and lubricating these parts. Quincy.

To NSURE. n. f. [tonsure, Fr. tonsure, Latin.] The act of clipping the hair; the state of being shorn.

The vestals, after having received the tonsure, suffered their hair to come again, being here full grown, and gathered under the veil. Addison.

Too, adv. [to, Saxon.]

1. Over and above; overmuch; more than enough. It is used to augment the signification of an adjective or adverb to a vicious degree.

Your father's rough and stern,
His will too strong to bend, too proud to learn.

Crowley.

Groundless prejudices and weaknesses of conceit, instead of tenderness, mislead too many others, too many, otherwise good men.

Spratt's Sermons.

It is too much to build a doctrine of so mighty consequence upon so obscure a place of Scripture.

Locke.

These ridiculous stories abide with us too long, and too far influence the weaker part of mankind.

Watts.

2. It is sometimes doubled to increase its emphasis; but this reduplication always seems harsh, and is therefore laid aside.

Oh, that this too too solid flesh would melt!

Shakespeare.

Sometimes it would be full, and then,

Oh! too too soon deer are again;

Helips'd sometimes, that 'twould so fall.

There would appear no hope at all.

Shakespeare.

3. Likewise; also.

See what a scourge is laid upon your hate;

And I, for winking at your discords too,

Have lost a brace of kinsmen.

Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet

Let on my cup no wars be found,

Let those incite to quarrels too,

Which wine itself enough can do.

Oldham.

The arriving to such a disposition of mind as shall make a man take pleasure in other men's sins, is evident from the text, and from experience too.

South.

It is better than letting our trade fall for want of current pledges, and better too than borrowing money of our neighbours.

Locke.

A courtier and a patriot too.

Pope.

Let those eyes that view

The daring crime, behold the vengeance too.

Pope.

1. Any instrument of manual operation.

In mulberries the sap towards the bark only, into which if you cut a little, it will come forth, but if you pierce it deeper with a tool, it will be dry.

Bacon.

They found in many of their mines more gold than earth; a metal, which the Americans not regarding, greedily exchanged for hammers, knives, axes, and the like tools of iron.

Key.

Arm'd with such guarding tools as art, yet rude,

Quitted of fire had form'd.

Milton's Par. Lost.

The ancients had some secret to harden the

Addison.

2. A hireling; a wretch who acts at the command of another.

He'd choose

To talk with wits in dirty shoes;

And scorn the tools with stars and garters.

So often seen caressing Chartres.

Swift.

To Toor, v. n. [Of this word, in this sense, I know not the derivation: perhaps tooran, Saxon, contracted from toperan, to know or examine.]

1. To pry; to peep; to search narrowly and sily. It is still used in the provinces, otherwise obsolete.

I cast to go a shooting,

Long wand'ring up and down the land,

With bow and bolts on either hand,

For birds and bushes rooting.

Spenser's Poet.

2. It was used in a contemptuous sense, which I do not fully understand.

This writer should wear a rooting horn.

Hewel.

Tooth, n. s. plural teeth. toð, Saxon; tand, Dutch.]

The teeth are the hardest and smoothest bones of the body; about the seventh or eighth month they begin to pierce the edge of the jaw: the dentures incisives, or front teeth of the upper jaw, appear first, and then those of the lower jaw: after them come out the canine or eye teeth, and last of all the molars or grinders: about the seventh year they are thrust out by new teeth, and if these teeth be lost they never grow again; but some have shed their teeth twice; about the one-and-twentieth year the two last of the molars spring up, and they are called dentures sapientiales.

Quincy.

Avaunt, you cure!

Be thy mouth or black or white,

Tooth that poisons if it bite.

Desert deserves with characters of brass

A forced residence against the tooth of time,

And razure of oblivion.

Shakespeare.

The teeth alone among the bones continue to grow in length during a man's whole life, as appears by the unsightly length of one tooth when its opposite happens to be pulled out.

Ray on the Creation.

2. Taste; palate.

These are not dishes for thy dainty tooth;

What, ha! thou'st got an ulcer in thy mouth?

Why stand'st thou picking?

Dryden.

3. A tine, prong, or blade, of any multifid instrument.

The priest's servant came while the fish was in seething, with a fish hook of three teeth.

1 Sam. ii 13.

I made an instrument in fashion of a comb, whose teeth being in number sixteen, were about an inch and an half broad, and the intervals of the teeth about two inches wide.

Newton's Opticks.

4. The prominent part of wheels, by which they catch upon correspondent parts of other bodies.

The edge whereon the teeth are is always made thicker than the back, because the back follows the edge.

Maxon.

In clocks, though the wheels and teeth be never so smooth, yet if they be not oiled will hardly move, though you clog them with never so much weight; but apply a little oil, they whirl about very swiftly with the tenth part of the force.

Ray.

5. TOOTH and nail. With one's utmost violence; with every means of attack or defence.

A lion and bear were at tooth and nail which should carry off a fawn.

L'Estrange.

6. To the TEETH. In open opposition.

It warns the very sickness in my heart,

That I shall live and tell him to his teeth,

Thus diddest thou.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

The action lies

In his true nature, and we ourselves compell'd,

Even to the teeth and forehead of our faults,
To give in evidence.

Shakespeare.

The way to our horses lies back again by the house, and then we shall meet 'em full in the teeth.

Dryden.

7. To cast in the TEETH. To insult by open exprobration.

A wife body's part it were not to put out his fire, because his fond and foolish neighbour, from whom he borrowed wherewith to kindle it, might cast him thence with in the teeth, saying, Were it not for me thou wouldst freeze, and not be able to heat thyself.

Hobbes.

8. In spite of the TEETH. Notwithstanding threats expressed by shewing teeth; notwithstanding any power of injury or defence.

The guiltiness of my mind drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fables.

Shakespeare.

The only way is, not to grumble at the lot they must bear in spite of their teeth.

L'Estrange.

9. To show the TEETH. To threaten.

When the law shows her teeth, but dares not bite,

And South-Sea treasures are not brought to light.

Young.

To Toorn, v. a. [from tooth.]

1. To furnish with teeth; to indent.

Then saws were tooth'd, and founding axes made.

Dryden.

The point hooked down like that of an eagle, and both the edges tooth'd, as in the Indian crow.

Grew's Museum.

Get a pair of tongs like a smith's tongs, stronger, and tooth'd at the end.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. To lock in each other.

It is common to tooth in the stretching course two inches with the stretcher only.

TOOTHACH, n. s. [tooth and ach.] PAINT in the teeth.

There never yet was the philosopher

That could endure the toothach patiently,

However at their ease they talk'd like gods.

He that sleeps feels not the toothach.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

I have the toothach.

—What, sigh for the toothach!

Which is but an humour or a worm.

One was grown desperate with the toothach.

Temple.

TOOTHDRAWER, n. s. [tooth and draw.] One whose business is to extract painful teeth.

Nature with Scots, as toothdrawers hath dealt,
Who use to sting their teeth upon their belt.

Cicero.

When the teeth are to be dislocated, a tooth-drawer is consulted.

Wesman's Surgery.

TOOTHED, adj. [from tooth.] Having teeth.

TOOTHLESS, adj. [from tooth.] Wanting teeth; deprived of teeth.

Deep-dinted wrinkles on her cheek she draws,

Sunk are her eyes, and toothless are her jaws.

Dryden.

They are fed with flesh minced small, having not only a sharp head and snout, but a narrow and toothless snout.

Ray.

TOOTHPICK, n. s. [tooth and pick.]

TOOTHPICKER, n. s. An instrument by which the teeth are cleansed from any thing sticking between them.

I will fetch you a toothpicker from the farthest inch of Asia.

Shakespeare. Much ado about Nothing.

He and his toothpick at my worship's mass.

Shakespeare.

Preserve my woods, whereof, if this course hold, there will hardly be found in some places enough to make a toothpick.

Hewitt's Engl. Tears.

If toothpicks of the lentile be wanting, of a quill then make a toothpick. Sandys.

Lentile is a beautiful ever-green, and makes the best toothpicks. Mortimer's Husbandry.

TOOTHsome, adj. [from tooth.] Palatable; pleasing to the taste.

Some are good to be eaten while young, but nothing toothsome as they grow old. Carv.

TOOTHsomeness, n. f. [from toothsome.] Pleasantness to the taste.

TOOTHwort, n. f. [dentaria, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

TOP, n. f. [topp, Welsh; top, Saxon; top, Dutch and Danish; topper, a crest, Highlandic.]

1. The highest part of any thing.

I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats,
And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in land,
Vailing her high top lower than her ribs. Shakspeare.
He wears upon his baby brow the round
And top of sovereignty. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Here is a mount, whose toppe seems to despise
The farre inferior vale that underlies;
Who, like a great man rais'd aloft by fate,
Measures his height by others mean estate. Brown.
Here Sodom's tow'rs raise their proud tops on high,
The tow'rs as well as men outbrave the sky. Cowley.
Thou nor on the top of old Olympus dwelt. Milton.

One poor roof, made of poles meeting at the top, and covered with the bark of trees. Heylyn.
That government which takes in the content of the greatest number of the people, may justly be said to have the broadest bottom; and if it terminate in the authority of one single person, it may be said to have the narrowest top, and so makes the firmest pyramid. Temple.

So up the steepy hill with pain
The weighty stone is rowl'd in vain;
Which having touch'd the top recoils,
And leaves the labourer to renew his toils.

Marine bodies are found upon hills, and at the bottom only such as have fallen down from their tops. Woodward.

2. The surface; the superficies.

Plants that draw much nourishment from the earth hurt all things that grow by them, especially such trees as spread their roots near the top of the ground. Bacon's Natural History.

Shallow brooks that flow'd so clear,
The bottom did the top appear. Dryden.

3. The highest place.

He that will not set himself proudly at the top of all things, but will consider the immensity of this fabrick, may think, that in other mansions there may be other and different intelligent beings. Locke.

What must he expect, when he seeks for preferment, but universal opposition when he is mounting the ladder, and every hand ready to turn him off when he is at the top? Swift.

4. The highest person.

How would you be,
If he, which is the top of judgment, should
But judge you as you are? Shakspeare's Measure for Measure.

5. The utmost degree.

Zeal being the top and perfection of so many religious affections, the causes of it must be most eminent. Spratt.

If you attain the top of your desires in fame, all those who envy you will do you harm; and of those who admire you few will do you good. Pope.
The top of my ambition is to contribute to that work. Pope.

6. The highest rank.

Take a boy from the top of a grammar school, and one of the same age bred in his father's family, and bring them into good company together, and then see which of the two will have the more manly carriage. Locke on Education.

7. The crown of the head.

All the stor'd vengeance of heaven fall
On her ingrateful top! Shakspeare's King Lear.
'Tis a per'ous boy,

Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable;
He's all the mother's from the top to toe. Shak.

8. The hair on the crown of the head;
the forelock.

Let's take the infant by the forward top;
For we are old, and on our quick'n decrees
Th' insensible and noiseless foot of time
Steals, ere we can effect them. Shakspeare.

9. The head of a plant.

The buds made our food are called heads or tops, as cabbage heads. Watts's Logick.

10. [Top, Danish.] An inverted conoid which children set to turn on the point, continuing its motion with a whip.

Since I pluckt geese, play'd truant, and whipt
top, I knew not what it was to be beaten till lately. Shakspeare.

For as whipp'd tops, and bandied balls,
The learned hold, are animals;
So hories they affirm to be More engines made by geometry. Hudibras.

As young snailings whip the top for sport,
On the smooth pavement of an empty court,
The wooden engine flies and whirls about,
Admir'd with clamours of the beardless rout. Dryden.

Still humming on their drowsy course they keep,
And lash'd to long, like *top*s, are lash'd asleep. Pope.

A top may be used with propriety in a similitude by a Virgil, when the sun may be dishonoured by a Mævius. Broome.

11. Top is sometimes used as an adjective to express lying on the top, or being at the top.

The top stones laid in clay are kept together. Mortimer.

To Tor, v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To rise aloft; to be eminent.

Those long ridges of lofty and topping mountains which run east and west, stop the evagation of the vapours to the north and south in hot countries. Darham's Physico Theology.

Some of the letters distinguish themselves from the rest, and top it over their fellows; these are to be considered as letters and as cyphers. Addison on Medals.

2. To predominate.

The thoughts of the mind are uninterruptedly employed by the determinations of the will, influenced by that topping uncertainty while it lasts. Locke.

3. To excel.

But write thy best and top, and in each line
Sir Formal's oratory will be thine. Dryden.

To Top, v. a.

1. To cover on the top; to tip; to defend or decorate with something extrinsecal on the upper part.

The glorious temple rear'd
Her pile, far off appearing like a mount
Of alabaster, topp'd with golden spires. Milton.
To him the fairest nymphs do show
Like moving mountains topp'd with snow. Waller.

There are other churches in the town, and two or three palaces, which are of a more modern make, and built with a good fancy; I was shown the little Notre Dame, that is handsomely designed, and topp'd with a cupola. Addison.
Top the bank with the bottom of the ditch. Mortimer.

2. To rise above.

A gourd planted by a large pine, climbing by the boughs twined about them, till it topped and covered the tree. L'Estrange.

3. To outgo; to surpass.

He's poor in no one facet, but stor'd with all,
Especially, in pride. Shakspeare.

And topping all others in boasting. Shakspeare.
So far he topp'd my thought,
That I in forgery of shapes and tricks
Come short of what he did. Shakspeare.

I am, cries the envious, of the same nature with the rest: why then should such a man top me?
Where there is equality of kind, there should be no distinction of privilege. Collier.

4. To crop.

Top your rose trees a little with your knife near a leaf bud.  Evelyn's Calendar.

5. To rise to the top of.

1. One who torments; one who gives pain.

He called to me for succour, desiring me at least to kill him, to deliver him from those tormentors.

Sidney.

2. One who inflicts penal tortures.

No prisoners there, enforc'd by torments, cry;
But fearless by their old tormentors lie.

Synod's Paraph.

Let his tormentor, conscience, find him out. Milt.
Hast thou full pow'r to kill,

O measure out his torments by thy will;
Yet what couldst thou, tormentor, hope to gain?
Thy lots continue unrepaired by pain.

Dryden.

The commandments of God being conformable to the dictates of right reason, man's judgment condemns him when he violates any of them; and so the sinner becomes his own tormentor.

South's Sermon.

The ancient martyrs passed through such new inventions and varieties of pain as tired their torments.

Addison.

TORN. part pass. of tear.

Y. shall not eat any flesh that is torn of be. Exod. xi.

Exod. xi.

A comprehensive expedient to assist the frail and torpent memory through to multitudes an employment.

Penryn.

TORPID. adj. [torpidus, Lat.] Numbed; motionless; sluggish; not active.

Without heat all things would be torpid, and without motion.
The sun awakes the torpid sap.

Ray on the Creation

TORPIDNESS. n. f. [from torpid.] The state of being torpid.

Though the object about which it is exercised be poor, little, and low: yet a man hath this advantage by the exercise of this faculty, about it, that it keeps it from rest and torpidity, it enlargeth and habituates it for a due improvement even about nobler objects.

Macle's Origin of Mankind.

TORPIDITUDE. n. f. [from torpid.] State of being motionless; numbness; sluggishness.

Some, in their most perfect state, subsist in a kind of torpidity or sleeping state.

Darwin.

TORROR. n. f. [Latin.] Dulness; numbness; inability to move; dulness of sensation.

Motion disturbs the torpor of solid bodies, which, beside their motion of gravity, have in them a natural appetite not to move at all.

Bacon's Nat. Hist.

TORREFACTION. n. f. [torrefaction, Fr. torrefacio, Lat.] The act of drying by the fire.

When torrefied sulphur makes bodies black, why does torrefaction make sulphur itself black?

Boyle on Colours.

If it have not a sufficient intoleration, it looketh pale; if it be sunned too long, it fullereth itself.

Brown.

TORREFFY. v. a. [torrifier, Fr. torrefacio, Lat.] To dry by the fire.

In the sulphur of bodies torrefied consist the principles of inflammability.

Brown's Vulgar Fire-arts.

The Africans are more peculiarly scorched and torrefied from the sun by addition of dyes from the soil.

Brown.

Divers learned men assign, for the cause of blackness, the sooty steam of adust or torrefied sulphur.

Boyle on Colours.

Torrefied sulphur makes bodies black; I desire to know why torrefaction makes sulphur itself black?

Boyle.

Another distil is composed of two heminae of white wine, half a hemina of honey, Egyptian nitre mixed of a quadrant.

Arbust not.

TORRENT. n. f. [torrent, Fr. torrens, Lat.]

1. A sudden stream raised by showers.

The near in blood

Forlake me like the torrent of a flood.

Sandys on Feb.

Will no kind flood, no friendly rain,
Disguise the marshal's plain disgrace;
No torrents swell the low Mahayne?

The world will say he durst not pass.

Prior.

2. A violent and rapid stream; tumultuous current.

Not far from Caucasus are certain steep-falling torrents, which wash down many grains of gold, as in many other parts of the world; and the people there inhabiting use to let many fleeces of wool in these descents of waters, in which the grains of gold remain, and the water passeth through, which Strabo witnesseth to be true.

Rail.

The memory of those who, out of duty and conscience, opposed that torrent which did overwhelm them, should not lose the recompense due to their virtue.

Clarendon.

When shrivell'd herbs on with'ring stems decay,
The wry ploughman, on the mountain's brow,
Undans his wat'ry stores, huge torrents flow,
Templing the thirsty fever of the field.

Dryden's Georgicks.

Erasmus, that great injur'd name,
Stemm'd the wild torrents of a barbarous age.

Pope.

TORRENT. adj. [torrens, Lat.] Rolling in a rapid stream.

Pierc'd Philgeton,

Whose waves of torrent fire inflame with rage.

Milton.

TORRID. adj. [torride, Fr. torridus, Lat.]

1. Parched; dried with heat.

Galen's commentators mention a twofold dryness; the one concomitant with a heat, which they call a torrid takes; the other with a coldness, when the parts are consumed through extinction of their native heat.

Murray on Conjunctions.

2. Burning; violently hot.

This with heat and heat,

And vapours as the Libyan air adust,
Began to parch that temperate clime.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. It is particularly applied to the regions or zone between the tropicks.

Columbus first

Found a temperate in a torrid zone;
The torrid air tann'd by a cooling breeze.

Dryd.

Those who amidst the torrid regions live,
May they not gales unknown to us receive?
See daily showers rejoice the thirfty earth,
And bless the flow'ry buds succeeding birth.

Prior.

TORSE. n. f. [In heraldry.] A wreath.

TORSEL. n. f. [torse, Fr.] Any thing in a twisted form.

When you lay any timber on brickwork, as torse for mair's uses to lie on, or inrols over windows, lay them in foam.

TORSION. n. f. [torso, Lat.] The act of turning or twisting.

TORT. n. f. [tort, Fr. fortum, low Lat.] Mischief; injury; calamity. Obsolete.

Then gan triumphant trumpets sound on high,
That sent to heaven the ech'd report
Of their new joy, and happy victory Against him that had been long oppress'd with tort,
And still imprisoned in figed tort.

Spenser.

He headst bad them come to court,
For no wild beasts should do them any tort.

Spenser.

Your disobedience and ill managing
Of actions, left for want of due support,
Puts I justly to a further spring.

Fairfax.

Spring of fiction, strife, oppression, tort.

TORTILL. adj. [tortilis, Lat.] Twisted; wreathed.

Bacon.

TORTIOUS. adj. [from tort.] Injurious; doing wrong.

Spenser.

TORTIVE. adj. [from tortus, Lat.] Twisted; wreathed.

Knobs by the conflux of meeting sap
Interact the sound pine, and divert his grain
Tortive and want from his course of growth.

Shakespeare.

TORTOISE. n. f. [tortus, Fr.]

1. An animal covered with a hard shell: there are tortoises both of land and water.

In his needy shop a tortoise hung,

An alligator stuff.

Shakespeare.

A living tortoise being turned upon its back, not being able to make use of its paws for the turning of itself, because they could only bend towards the belly, it could help itself only by its neck and head; sometimes one side, sometimes another, by pushing against the ground, to rock itself as in a cradle, to find out where the inequality of the ground might permit it to roll its shell.

Ray on the Creation.

2. A form into which the ancient soldiers used to throw their troops, by bending down, and holding their bucklers above their heads so that no darts could hurt them.

Their target in a tortoise cast, the foes

Secure advancing to the turrets rose.

Dryden's Æneid.

TORTUOSITY. n. f. [from tortuosus.]

Wreath; flexure.

These the midwife contriveth unto a knot close unto the body of the infant, from whence ensueth that tortuosity, or complicated nodosity, call'd the navel.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TORTUOUS. adj. [tortuosus, Fr. from tortuosus, tortus, Lat.]

1. Twisted; wreathed; winding.

So vary'd he, and of his tortuous train

Could many a wanton wreath.

Milton.

Aqueous vapours, like a dewy path, pass through so long and tortuous a piece of land.

Boyle.

2. Mischievous. [Thus I explain it, on supposition that it is derived from tort, wrong; but it may mean crooked; as we say, crooked ways for bad practices, crooked being regularly enough opposite to right. This in some copies is tortious, and therefore from tort.]

Ne ought he car'd whom he endamaged

By tortuous wrongs, or whom he begard of right.

Spenser.

TORTURE. n. f. [torture, French, tortura, Latin.]

1. Torments judicially inflicted; pain by which guilt is punished, or confession extorted.

Hecate

Then led me trembling through those dire abodes,
And taught the tortures of the avenging gods.

Dryden.

2. Pain; anguish; pang.

Better be with the dead,

Than on the torture of the mind to lie

In restless agony.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Colony spoken on racking torture

Milton.

TORTURE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To punish with tortures.

Hipparchus, my patriarch's bondman,

He may as pleasure whip, or hang, or torture.

Shakespeare.

The scourge inexorable and the torturing hour

Call us to penance.

Milton.

2. To vex; to excruciate; to torment.

Still must I cherish the dear, sad remembrance,

At once to torture and to gladden my soul.

Addison's Cato.

The howl is with the string continually, and thereby holdeth it in a continual trepidation.

Bacon's Natural History.

TORTURER. n. f. [from torture.] He who tortures; tormentor.

I play the torturer by small and small,

To lengthen out the woe that must be spoken.

Shakespeare.

When king Edward the second was amongst his torturers, the more to disgrace his face, they shaved him, and washed him with cold water, the king said, Well, yet I will have warm water; and so shed abundance of tears.

Bacon's Apophthegms.

TORTUOUS. n. f. [tortuosus, Lat.] Sourness; severity of countenance. Not used.

TORTUOUS. adj. [tortuosus, Lat.] Sour of aspect; stern; severe of countenance. Not used.

That tortuous frow look produced by anger, and that gay and pleasing countenance accompanying love.

DeRham.

TORY. n. f. [A cant term, derived, I suppose, from an Irish word signifying a savage.] One who adheres to the ancient constitution of the state, and the apostolical hierarchy of the church of England: opposed to a whig.

The knight is more a tory in the country than the town, because it more advances his interest.

Addison.

This protestant radical, this English divine,
in church and in state was of principles sound;
Was truer than steel to the Hanover line,
And grieved that a tory should live above ground.

Swift.

To confound his hated coin,
All parties and religions join,
Whigs, tories.

Swift.

TO TOSSE, v. n. [of the same original with to toss.] To come wool.

TO TOSSE, v. a. [tappere, Dutch; tasser, Fr. to accumulate. Atzbrav, Oswald, to dance; Meric Casaubon. Tusen, Germ. to make a noise; Skinner: perhaps from to us, a word used by those who would have any thing thrown to them. Pret. tossed or tost; part. pass. tossed or tost.]

1. To throw with the hand, as a ball at play.

With this she seem'd to play, and, as in sport,
To her love in presence of the court.

Dryd.

A shepherd diverted himself with tossing up eggs and catching them again.

Addison.

2. To throw with violence.

Back do I toss these treasons to thy head. Shak.
Vulcanos discharge forth with the fire not only metallick and mineral matter, but huge stones, tossing them up to a very great height in the air.

Woodward's Natural History.

3. To lift with a sudden and violent motion.

Behold how they toss their torches on high,
How they point to the Persian abodes.

Dryden.

I call'd to stop him, but in vain.

He toss his arm aloft, and proudly told me,

He would not stay.

Addison's Cato.

So talk too like buzzing things;

Toss up their heads, and stretch their wings.

Prior.

4. To agitate; to put into violent motion.

The getting of treasures by a lying tongue is a vanity tossed to and fro.

Proverbs, xxi. 6.

Things will have their first or second agitation;
if they be not tossed upon the arguments of counsel, they will be tossed upon the waves of fortune, and be full of inconstancy, doing and undoing.

Bacon's Essays.

Crowls, hoods, and habits, with their wearers toss.

And flutter'd into rags.

Milton.

I have made several voyages upon the sea, often been tossed in storms.

Addison's Spectator.

For whose dark lake so many troubles her did toss.

Spenser.

Calm region once,

And all of peace, now toss and turbulent.

Milton.

6. To keep in play; to tumble over.

That scholar should come to a better knowledge in the Latin tongue, than must do that spend four years in tossing all the rules of grammar in common school.

Ascham.

7. To toss. v. n.

1. To sling; to winch; to be in violent commotion.

Dire was the tossing! drop the groans! despair

Tended the sick, bulch from couch to couch.

Milton.

Galen tells us of a woman patient of his whom he found very weak in bed, continually tossing and tumbling from one side to another, and totally deprived of her senses.

Hartley.

To toss and fling, and to be restless, only frets and enrages our pain.

Tillotson.

And thou, my fire, not destin'd by thy birth

To turn to dust and mix with common earth,

How wilt thou toss and rave, and long to die,

And quit thy claim to immortality!

They throw their person with a hoysen air

Across the room, and toss into the chair.

Young.

2. To be tossed.

Your mind is tossing on the sea,

There where your arguings

Do overpeer the petty traffickers.

Shakespeare.

3. To toss up. To throw a coin into the air, and wager on what side it shall fall.

I'd try it any pleasure could be found

In tossing up for twenty thousand pound.

Bramhall.

4. Toss. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of tossing.

The discus that is to be seen in the hand of the celebrated Caster at Don Livio's is perfectly round, nor has it any thing like a sling fastened to it, to add force to the toss.

Addison.

2. An affected manner of raising the head.

His various modes from various fashions follow;

One taught the toss, and one the new French wallow;

His sword-knot this, his cravat that designed.

Dryden.

There is hardly a polite sentence in the following dialogues which doth not require some suitable toss of the head.

Swift.

5. To'sser. n. f. See TASSEL.

Tie at each lower corner a handful of hops with a piece of packthread, to make a tossel, by which you may conveniently lift the bag when full,

Martimer's Husbandry.

TO'TALLY. adv. [from total.] Wholly; fully; completely.

The sound interpreters expound this image of God, of natural reason, which, if it be totally or mostly detached, the right of government doth cease.

Bacon's Holy War.

The obdurate sinner, that hath long hardened his own heart against God, thereby provokes him totally to withdraw all inward grace from him.

Hammond.

Charity doth not end with this world, but goes along with us into the next, where it will be perfected: but faith and hope shall then totally fail;
the one being changed into light, the other into enjoyment.

Atterbury's Sermons.

TOTHER. contracted for the other.

As bad the one as t'other.

Farnaby.

TO'TTER. v. n. [tateren, to stagger, Dutch.] To shake so as to threaten a fall.

What news, in th's our tottering state?

—It is a reeling world indeed, my lord,

And I believe will never stand upright.

As a bowing wall shall yet be, and as a tottering fence.

Psalms.

The foes already have possess'd the wall,

Troy nods from high, and utters to her fall.

Dry.

TO'TTERY. } adj. [from totter.] Shaking;

TO'TTY. } unsteady; dizzy. Neither of those words is used.

No falsehood can endure
Touch of celestial temper, but returns
Of force to its own blindness. Milton.

2. The sense of feeling.

O dear son Edgar,
Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
I'd say, I had eyes again. Shakespeare's King Lear.
The spirit of wine, or chemical oils, which are so hot in operation, are to the first touch cold.

By touch the first pure qualities we learn,
Which quicken all things, hot, cold, moist, and
dry;

By touch, hard, soft, rough, smooth, we do discern;

By touch, sweet pleasure and sharp pain we try.

Darwin.

The spider's touch how exquisitely fine!
Feels at each thread, and lives along the line.

Pope.

The fifth sense is touch, a sense over the whole body. Locke.

3. The act of touching.

The touch of the cold water made a pretty kind of shuddering come over her body, like the twinkling of the lightning among the fire's flares. Sidney.

With one virtuous touch
Th' arch-chenick sun produces precious things. Milton.

4. State of being touched.

The time was once, when thou unurg'd wouldst vow,

That never touch was welcome to thy hand,
Unless I touch'd. Shakespeare.

The death of Fulvia, with more urgent touches,
Do strongly speak 't us. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleop.

12. Something of passion or affection.

He which without our nature could not on earth suffer for the world, doth now also, by means thereof, both make intercession to God for sinners, and exercise dominion over all men, with a true, natural, and a sensible touch of mercy. Hooker.

He loves us not:

He wants the natural touch. Shakespeare.

13. Particular relation.

Speech of touch towards others should be sparingly used; for discourse ought to be as a field, without coming home to any man. Bacon's Essays.

14. [Touché, Fr.] A stroke.

Our kings no sooner fall out, but their mints make war upon one another; one meets sometimes with very nice touches of railery. Addison on Medals.

Another smart touch of the author we meet with in the fifth page, where, without any preparation, he breaks out all on a sudden into a vein of poetry.

Addison.

Though it error may be such,
As Knags and Burges cannot hit,
It yet may feel the nice touch
Of Wicheley's or Congreve's wit. Prior.

He gave the little wealth he had
To build a house for fools and mad;

To shew by one fatiuck touch,
No nation wanted it so much. Swift.

15. Animadversion; censure.

I never bare any touch of confidence with greater regret. King Charles.

Soon mov'd with touch of blame, thus Eve,
What words have pass'd thy lips, Adam seven!

Milton.

16. Exact performance of agreement.

Touch kept is commended, yet credit to keepe
Is pay and dispatch him, yet ewer ye sleepe. Tupper.

Quoth Hudibras, thou offer'st much,
But art not able to keepe touch. Hudibras.

I keepe touch both with my promise to Philip, and with my own usual frugality in their kind of collations. More.

He was not to expect that so perfidious a creature should keepe touch with him. L'Estrange.

17. A small quantity intermingled.

Madam, I have a touch of your condition,
That cannot brook the accept of reproof. Shakespeare.

This coming still nearer to an aspiration, a touch of it may perhaps be an ingredient in the rough guttural pronunciation of the Welsh and Irish.

Holder's Elements of Speech.

S f 2 18. A

18. A hint; slight notice given.

The king your matter knows their disposition very well, a small touch will put him in mind of them. Bacon.

to do or learn; docile; compliant with duty.

Some young towardly noblemen or gentlemen were usually sent as assistants or attendants.
Bacon's Advancement of Learning.

TOW'ARDNESS. n. f. [from toward.] Docility.

Presents will not throw away the towardness of a child, and the expense of education, upon a prostitution, the labour of which is increased, and the rewards are vanished.
South.

TOW'EL. n. f. [touaille, French; teuaglio, Italian.] A cloth on which the hands are wiped.

ous; containing poison.

TOY. n. f. [toyen, taughen, to dress with many ornaments, Dutch.]

1. A petty commodity; a trifle; a thing of no value.

Might I make acceptable unto her that toy which I had found, following an acquaintance of mine at the plough. Sidney.

They exchange for knives, glasses, and such toys.

great abundance of gold and pearls. Abbot.

Beaute of old

Thou thyself dost dilt on womankind, admiring

Their shape, their colour, and attractive grace,

None are, thou think'st, but taken with such toys.

Milton.

O virtue! virtue! what art thou become,

That men should leave thee for that toy a woman!

Dryden.

2. A plaything; a bauble.

To dally thus with death is no fit toy.

Go find some other play fellows, mine own sweet boy. Shakspeare.

What a collection of wealth laid out in coaches, trappings, tables, cabinets, and the like precious toys. Addison.

In Delia's hand this toy is fatal found,

Nor could that fabled dart more surely wound.

Pope.

We smile at flowers, we despise their joy,

And think their hearts enamour'd of a toy. Younger.

3. Matter of no importance.

'Tis a cockle, or a walnut shell,

A knick, a toy, a trick, a loby cap. Shakspeare.

High and noble things I slightly may not tell,

Nor light and idle toys my lines may vainly swell.

Drayton.

4. Folly; trifling practice; silly opinion.

The things which to long experience of all ages hath confirm'd and made profitable, let us not pretume to condemn as follies and toys, because we few times know not the cause and reason of them.

Hobbes.

5. Play; sport; amorous dalliance.

O ye sons of Venus, play your sport at will,

For greedy pleasures, carelets of your toys;

Thinks more upon her trifling of joys.

Spenser's Epithalamium.

So said he, and forbore not glance on toy

Of amorous intent. Arden.

6. Odd story; a silly tale.

I never may believe

These antick fables, nor their tury toys. Shakspeare.

7. Slight representation.

Shall that which hath always received this construction, be now disguised with a toy of novelty?

Hobbes.

8. Wild fancy; irregular imagery; odd conceit.

The very place puts toys of desperation

Without more motive, into every brain.

Dante.

That looks so many fathoms to the sea,
And hears it roar beneath. Shakespeare Hamlet.

To TOR. v. n. [from the noun.] To trifle; to dally amorously; to play.

To TRIFLE. adj. [from trifler.] Trifling; wanton.

To TRIFLERY. n. f. [from trifler.] Nugacity; wantonness.

Your fancy will dally that trifling of wanton fancy, that plays tricks with words, and to licker with the cupices of frothy imagination.

To TRIM. n. f. [from toy.] A seller of toys.

But what in all this can be more of trim,
Than to—, the forward toyman of his time.

To TRIP. n. f. [toy and shop.] A shop where playthings and little nice manufactures are sold.

Fans, ribbons, laces, and gewgaws, lay so thick together, that the heart was nothing left but a toyshop.

With varying vanities from every part,
They shift the moving toyshop of their heart.

To TOWSE. v. a. [See TOWSE and TLEASE.] To pull by violence or importunity.

I think'd thou, for that I infinite, or towe from thee thy business, I am therefore no courtier.

TRACE. n. f. [trac, Fr. traccia, Italian.]

1. Mark left by any thing passing; footsteps.

These as a line their long dimension drew,
Streaking the ground with sinuous trace.

2. Remain; appearance of what has been.

The people of these countries are reported to have lived like the beasts among them, without any traces of order, laws, or religion.

There are not the least traces of it to be met, the greater part of the ornaments being taken from Tarsan's arch, and set up to the conqueror.

TRACE. n. f. [from trac, Fr. traccia, Italian.]

3. [From trasser, French; trassés, traces.] Harness for beasts of draught.

Her wagon spokes made of long spinners' legs;
The cover, of the wings of grasshoppers;
The traces, of the sunniest spider's web.

In his look traces from the furrow came.
While lab'ring oxen, spent with toil and heat,
In their look traces from the field retreat.

Twelve young mules,
New to the plough, unpractis'd in the trace.

TO TRACE. v. a. [trac, Fr. tracere, Italian.]

1. To follow by the footsteps, or remaining marks.

I feel thy power to trace the ways
Of highest agents.

You may trace the Deluge quite round the globe in profane history; and every one of these people have a tale to tell concerning the restoration.

TO TRACE. v. a. [trac, Fr. tracere, Italian.]

2. To follow with exactness.

That servile path thou nobly dost decline,
Of tracing word by word, and line by line.

TO TRACE. v. a. [trac, Fr. tracere, Italian.]

3. To mark out.

Heads as a soul power to trace images or the
and perceive them.

TO TRACE. v. a. [trac, Fr. tracere, Italian.]

4. To follow with exactness.

Heads as a soul power to trace images or the
and perceive them.

4. To walk over.

Men, as they trace,
Both feet and face one way are wont to lead.

TRACER. n. f. [from trac.] One that traces.

Ambassadors should not be held the tracers of a plot of such malice.

TRACE. n. f. [trac, old French; traccia, Italian.]

1. Mark left upon the way by the foot or otherwise.

Following the track of Satan.
Hung by the neck and hair, and dragg'd around.

The hostile spear yet sticking in his wound,
With tracks of blood interlaid the dusty ground.

Consider the exterior frame of the globe, if we may find any tracks or footsteps of wisdom in its constitution.

2. A road; a beaten path.

With track oblique adorning he works his way.

Behold Terquatus the same track pursue,
And next the two devoted Devot view.

TO TRACK. v. a. [from the noun.] To follow by the footsteps or marks left in the way.

A shepherd's cur that in dusk evening's shade
Hath tracked forth some savage beast's trail.

He was not only a professed imitator of Horace,
but a learned plagiarist in all the others; you track him every where in their lines.

TRACKLESS. adj. [from track.] Untrodden; marked with no footsteps.

Lost in trackless fields of shining days;
Unable to discern the way,

Which Nassau's virtue only could explore.

TRACT. n. f. [tractus, Lat.]

1. Any kind of extended substance.

Heaven's hide, nothing from thy view,
Nor the deep tract of hell.

2. A region; a quantity of land.

Only there are some tracts which, by high mountains, are barred from air and fresh wind.

Monte Cimino, by the river called Trulla, is a very high mountain joined to the main land by a narrow tract of earth.

3. Contiguity; any thing protracted, or drawn out to length.

The myrtle flourisheth still; and wonderful it is, that for so long a tract of time she should still continue fresh.

Your bodies may at last turn all to spirit,
Improv'd by tract of time, and wing'd ascend Eth'ral as we.

As in tract of speech a dubious word is easily known by the coherence with the rest, and a dubious letter by the whole word; so may a deaf person, having competent knowledge of language,
by an acute sagacity, by some more evident word discerned by his eye, know the sense.

4. Course; manner of process: unless it means, in this place, rather, discourse; explanation.

The tract of every thing
Would, by a good discourses, lose some life
Which action's self was tongue to.

5. It seems to be used by Shakespeare for track.

The weary sun hath made a golden set,
And, by the bright tract of his fiery car,
Gives signal of a goodly day to-morrow.

6. [Tractatus, Lat.] A treatise; a small book.

The church clergy at that time writ the best collection of tracts against popery, that ever appeared.

TRACTABLE. adj. [tractabilis, Latin; tractable, French.]

1. Manageable; docile; compliant; obsequious; practicable; governable.

For moderation of those affections growing from the very natural bitterness and gall of adversity, the scripture much allegeth contrary fruit, which affliction likewise hath, whenever it fallth on them that are tractable, the grace of God's holy spirit concurring therewith.

Tractable obedience is a slave
To each intended will.

If thou dost find him tractable to us,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons;
If he be tedious, icy, cold, unwilling,
Be thou so too.

As those who are bent to do wickedly will never want tempters to urge them on in an evil course, so those who yield themselves tractable to good motions, will find the spirit of God more ready to encourage them.

If a strict hand be kept over children from the beginning, they will in that age be tractable, and quietly submit.

2. Palpable; such as may be handled.

The other measures are of continued quantity, visible, and for the most part tractable; where a true is always transient, neither to be seen nor felt.

TRACTABLENESS. n. f. [from tractable.] The state of being tractable; compliance; obsequiousness.

It will be objected, that whatsoever I fancy of children's tractableness, yet many will never apply.

TRACTABLY. adv. In a tractable manner; gently.

TRACTATE. n. f. [tractatus, Latin.] A treatise; a tract; a small book.

Many divines of our own nation, as far as the written tractates of the fathers, and in their compositions of the fourth commandment, maintain the foresaid position.

Though philosophical tractates make enumeration of authors, yet are their reasons usually introduced.

We need no other evidence than Glanville's tractate.

TRACTILE. adj. [tractus, Latin.] Capable to be drawn out or extended in length; ductile.

The consistencies of bodies are very divers; fragile, tough, flexible, inflexible, tractile, or to be drawn forth in length, intractile.

TRACTILITY. n. f. [from tractile.] The quality of being tractile.

Silver, whose ductility and tractility are much inferior to those of gold, was drawn out to so slender a wire, that a single grain amounted to twenty-seven feet.

TRACTION. n. f. [from tractus, Latin.] The act of drawing; the state of being drawn.

The malleus being fixed to an extensible membrane, follows the traction of the muscle, and is drawn inwards to bring the terms of that line nearer in proportion as it is curved, and so gives a tension to the tympanum.

TRADE. n. f. [tratta, Italian.]

1. Traffick; commerce; exchange of goods for other goods, or for money.

Whoever commands the sea, commands the trade; whoever commands the trade of the world, commands the riches of the world, and consequently the world itself.

Trade increases in one place, and decays in another.

2. Occupation; particular employment, whether manual or mercantile, distinguished from the liberal arts or learned professions.

Trade increases in one place, and decays in another.

Trade increases in one place, and decays in another.

Trade increases in one place, and decays in another.

Trade increases in one place, and decays in another.

Trade increases in one place, and decays in another.

Trade increases in one place, and decays in another.

Trade increases in one place, and decays in another.

Trade increases in one place, and decays in another.

Trade increases in one place, and decays in another.

Trade increases in one place, and decays in another.

Appoint to every one that is not able to live of his freehold, a certain trade of life; the which trade he shall be bound to follow. Spenser on Ireland.
How dizzy! half way down
Hangs one that gathers samplings, dreadful trade!
Shakespeare.

I'll mountebank their loves, and come home below'd

Of all the trades in Rome. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.

Fear and piety,
Instruction, manners, mysteries, and trades,
Decline to your contending contraries. Shakespeare.

The rude Equivocal,
Hunting their sport, and plund'ring was their trade.
Dryden.

Fight under him; there's plunder to be had;
A captain is a very gainful trade. Dryden. Juvenal.

The whole division that Mars pertains,
All trades of death, that deal in steel for gains.
Dryden.

The emperor Pertinax applied himself in his youth to a gainful trade; his father, judging him fit for a better employment, had a mind to turn his education another way, the son was obstinate in pursuing so profitable a trade, a sort of merchant-dile of wood.
Arbutnot on Coins.

3. Instruments of any occupation.

The shepherd bears
His house and household goods, his trade of war,
His bow and quiver, and his trusty cur. Dr. Virg.

4. Any employment not manual; habitual exercise.

Call some of young years to train them up in that trade; and so fit them for weighty affairs. Bacon.

5. Custom; habit; standing practice.

Thy sin is not accidental, but a trade. Shakespeare.

6. Formerly trade was used of domestick, and traffick of foreign commerce.

To TRADE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To traffick; to deal; to hold commerce.

He commanded these servants to be called, to know how much every man had gained by trading.
Luke xix. 15.

Delos, a sacred place, grew a free port, where nations warring with one another resorted with their goods, and traded. Arbutnot on Coins.

Maximinus traded with the Goths in the prospect of his estate in Thracia. Arbutnot.

2. To act merely for money.

Saucy and overbold! how a d you dare
To trade and traffick with Macbeth
In riddles and affairs of death? Shakespeare. Macbeth.

They were thy merchants: they traded the persons of men and vessels of brass in thy market.
Ezekiel, xxvii. 13.

TRA'DED. adj. [from trade.] Veried; practised.

Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes;
For villainy is not without such rheum:
And he long traded in it makes it seem Like rivers of remorse and innocence. Shakespeare.

Eyes and ears,
Two traded pilots 'twixt the dangerous shores
Of will and judgment. Shakespeare. Troil. and Cress.

TRA'DEFUL. adj. [trade and full.] Commercial; busy in traffick.

Ye *trade*ful merchants, that with weary toil
Do seek most precious things to make your gain,
And both the Indies of their treasure spoil,
What needeth you to seek so far in vain? Spenser.

TRA'DER. n. s. [from trade.]

1. One engaged in merchandise or commerce.

Pilgrims are going to Canterbury with rich-offerings, and traders riding to London with fat purses.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Now the victory's won,
We return to our lasses like fortunate traders, Triumphant with spoils. Dryden.

Many traders will necessitate merchants to trade for less profit, and consequently be more frugal.
Child on Trade.

That day traders sum up the accounts of the week.
Swift.

2. One long used in the methods of money-getting; a practitioner.

TRA'DESFOLK. n. s. [trade and folk.]

People employed in trades.

By his advice victuallers and tradesfolk would soon get all the money of the kingdom into their hands.
Swift.

TRA'DESMAN. n. s. [trade and man.]

A shopkeeper. A merchant is called a trader, but not a tradesman; and it seems distinguished in Shakespeare from a man that labours with his hands.

I live by the awl, I meddle with no tradesmen's matters.
Shakespeare.

They rather had beheld Diffident numbers peering streets; than see
Our tradesmen singing in the shops, and going About their functions. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Order a trade thither and thence, so as some few merchants and tradesmen, under colour of furnishing the colony with necessaries, may not grind them.
Bacon.

Tradesmen might conjecture what doings they were like to have in their respective dealings.
Grant.

M Jordan would not be thought a tradesman, but ordered some silk to be measured out to his partner's friends: now I give up my shop. Prior.

I am a plain tradesman with a shop, he is now grown a very rich count; gentleman.
Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

Domesticks in a gentleman's family have more opportunities of improving their minds, than the ordinary tradesman.
Swift.

Boastful and rough, your fast son is a squire,
The next a tradesman, meek, and much a liar.
Pope's Epigrams.

Penitens was a busy notable tradesman, very prosperous in his dealings, but died in the thirty-fifth year of his age.
Levy.

TRADE WIND. n. s. [trade and wind.]

The monsoon; the periodical wind between the tropicks.

Thus to the eastern wealth through storms we go,
But now, the Cape once doubled, fear no more;
A constant trade-wind will securely blow,
And gently lay us on the spicy shore. Dryden.

His were the projects of perpetuum mobile, and of increasing the trade-wind by vast plantation of reeds.
Arbutnot.

Comfortable is the trade-wind to the equatorial parts, without which life would be both short and grievous.
Cleynce.

TRADITION. n. s. [traditio, Fr. traditio, Lat.]

1. The act or practice of delivering accounts from mouth to mouth without written memorials; communication from age to age.

To learn it we have tradition; namely, that so we believe, because both we from our predecessors, and they from theirs, have so received. Hooker.

2. Any thing delivered orally from age to age.

They the truth
With superstitions and tradition's taint, Left only in those written records pure. Milton.

It is well known to have been a general tradition amongst these nations, that the world was made, and had a beginning.
Wilkins.

Our old solemnities
From no blind zeal or fond tradition's rick;
But, sav'd from death, our Agrivus yearly pay
These grateful honours to the God of day.
Pope's Statius.

TRADITIONAL. adj. [from tradition.]

1. Delivered by tradition; descending by oral communication; transmitted by the foregoing to the following age.

Whence may we have the infallible traditional sense of scripture, if not from the heads of their church?
Tillotson.

If there be any difference in natural parts, it should seem the advantage lies on the side of children born from wealthy parents, the same traditional flesh and luxury which render their body weak, perhaps refining their spirits.
Swift.

2. Obsolete of traditions, or idle rites.

Not used, nor proper.

God forbid
We should infringe the holy privilege
Of sanctuary!

You are too senseless obdurate, my lord;
Too ceremonious and traditional. Shakespeare. Rich. II.

TRADITIONALLY. adv. [from traditional.]

1. By transmission from age to age.

There is another channel wherein this doctrine is traditionally derived from Saint John, namely, from the clergy of Asia. Burner's Theory of the Earth.

2. From tradition without evidence of written memorials.

I crosseth the proverb, and Rome might well be built in a day, if that were true which is traditionally related by Strabo, that the great cities Anchiale and Tarsus were built by Sardanaphilus both in one day.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TRADITIONARY. adj. [from tradition.]

Delivered by tradition; transmissive; handed down from age to age.

Suppose the same traditionary strain
Of rigid manners in the house remain, Inevitable truth, an old plain Sabine's heart. Dryden.

Oral tradition is more uncertain, especially if we may take that to be the traditionary sense of texts of scripture.
Tillotson.

The fame of our Saviour, which in so few years had gone through the whole earth, was confirmed and perpetuated by such records as would preserve the traditionary account of him to after ages.
Addison on the Christian Religion.

TRADITIVE. adj. [traditve, Fr. from trade, Lat.] Transmitted or transmissible from age to age.

Suppose we on things traditive decide,
And both appeal to scripture to decide.
Dryden's Hind and Panther.

To TRANDUCE. v. a. [traduco, Lat. traducere, Fr.]

1. To censure; to condemn; to represent as blameable; to calumniate; to decry.

The best stratagem that Satan hath, who knoweth his kingdom to be no one way more shaken than by the publick devout playacts of God's church, is by traducing the form and manner of them, to bring them into contempt, and so slack the force of all men's devotion towards the exercise.

Those particular ceremonies which they pretend to be so scandalous, we shall more thoroughly list, when other things also traduced in the publick duties of the church are, together with these, to be touched.
Hooker.

Whilst calumny has such potent abettors, we are not to wonder at its growth. as long as men are malicious and designing, they will be traducing.
Comment on the Tongue.

From that preface he took his hint, though he had the best rest not to acknowledge his benefactor, but instead of it to traduce me in libel.
Dryden's Fables.

2. To propagate; to increase or continue by deriving one from another.

None are so gross as to contend for this,
That souls from bodies may traduced be;
Between

Between whole natures no proportion is,
When root and branch in nature still agree.

Dantes.

From these only the race of perfect animals were propagated and traduced over the earth.

Hale.

Some believe the soul is made by God, some by angels, and some by the elements: when it be immediately created or traduced, hath been the great ball of contention to the latter ages.

Glanville's S. off.

TRADUCIMENT. n. f. [from traduce.]

Censure, obloquy.

Rome must know

The value of her own: 'twere a concealment
Wick than a trist, no lets than a traducement,
To hide your doings.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

TRADUCER. n. f. [from traduce.]

1. A false censurer, a calumniator.

2. One who derives.

TRADUCIBLE. adj. [from traduce.] Such as may be derived.

Though oral tradition might be a competent dis-cove of the original of a knowledge, yet such a tradition was incompetent without written monuments to direct to the original laws, because they are of a complex nature, and therefore not orally
traducible to so great a distance of age.

Hale.

TRADUCION. n. f. [from traduce.]

1. Derivation from one of the same kind; propagation.

The persons of traduction were their adversaries of ascribing the attributes of God, and the asserters of creation impeach them of violence to the nature of him.

Glanville.

It by tradition come thy mind,

Our wonder is the left to find

A soul so charming from a stock so good;

The father was transfused into thy blood.

Dryden.

2. Tradition; transmission from one to another.

Touching traditional communication and traduction of truth, conventional and engraven, I do not doubt but many of them have had the help of that devotion.

Hale.

3. Conveyance; act of transferring.

Since America is divided on every side by considerable seas, and no passage known by land, the traduction of bures could only be by shipping;
though this was a method used for the traduction of useful cattle from hence thither, yet it is not credible that bears and lions should have so much care used for their transportation.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

4. Transition.

The reports and fables have an agreement with the figures in rhetoric of repetition and traduction.

R. C. C.

TRAFFICK. n. f. [trafique, Fr. traffico, Italian.]

1. Commerce; merchandising; large trade; exchange of commodities. Traf-fick was formerly used for foreign commerce in distinction from trade.

Traffick is thy god.

Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.

My father

A merchant of great traffick through the world.

Shakespeare.

Tyre, a town indeed of great wealth and traffick,
and the most famous emporium of the elder times.

Heylyn.

As he was, for his great wisdom, stood the English Solomon, he used the example of that wise king in nothing more than by advancing the traffick of his people.

Addison.

2. Commodities; subject of traffick.

You'll see a dragedel daniel

From Bilunggate her fishy traffick bear.

Gay.

To TRAFFICK. v. n. [traffiquer, Fr. trafficare, Ital.]

1. To practise commerce; to merchandise; to exchange commodities.

They first plant for corn and cattle, and after enlarge themselves for things to traffick withal.

Bacon's Advice to Killiers.

2. To trade meanly or mercenarily.

Saucy and overbold! how did you dare

To trade and traffick with Macbeth

In riddles and affairs of death? Shak. Macbeth

How hast thou dared to think so vilely of me,

That I would consent to thy mean arts,

And traffick with thee for a prince's rum? Rowe.

TRAFFICKER. n. f. [traffiqueur, Fr. from traffick.] Trader; merchant.

Your argosies with poorly sail,

Like signiors and rich burghers on the flood,

Do overpeer the petty traffickers

That court to them. Shaksp. Merch. of Venice.

It is as if many Jews very rich, and to great traffickers, that they have most of the English trade in their hands. Addison.

TRAGACANTH. n. f. [tragacantha, Latin.] A gum which proceeds from the incision of the root or trunk of a plant so called.

Trevoix.

TRAGEDIAN. n. f. [from tragedy; tragedian, Lat.]

1. A writer of tragedy.

Many of the poets themselves had much nobler conceptions of the Dæmon, than to imagine him to have anything so petty, as in these verses out of the ancient tragedians.

Sullivan's Hist.

2. An actor of tragedy.

I can counteract the deep tragedian;

Speak, and look back, and pry on every side,

Tremble and start at wagging of a straw,

Intensify deep suspicion. Shaksp. Richard III.

Is the well-lung'd tragedian's rage

They recommend their labours of the stage.

Dryden

TRAGEDY. n. f. [tragedia, Fr. trage-dia, Lat.]

1. A dramatick representation of a serious action.

Thousands more, that yet suspect no peril,

Will now conclude their plot: tragedy. Shaksp.

All our tragedies are of kings and princes, but you never see a poor man have a part unless it be as a chorus, or to fill up the scenes, to dance, or to be deided. Wylm's Holy Living.

Imitate the fiber of painting, tragedy; which employs the art of her art in the main action. Dryden.

An anthem to their god Dionysus, whilst the goat stood at his altar to be sacrificed, was called the goat song or tragedy.

Rymer's Tragedies of the last Age

There to her heart and tragedy address

The dagger, went to pierce the tyrant's breast.

P. p.

2. Any mournful or dreadful event.

I shall laugh at this,

That they, who brought me in my master's hate,

I live to look upon their tragedy. Shak. Rich. III.

I look upon this now done in England as another act of the same tragedy which was lately begun in Scotland. King Charles.

TRAGICAL. adj. [tragicus, Latin; tragick, French.]

1. Relating to tragedy.

The root and tragick effect,

Vouchsafe, O thou the mournfull'st muse of nine,

That wilt not the tragick stage for to direct,

In several complaints and wailful tune

Reveal to me. Spenser's Muirpotmos.

Thy Clarence he is dead that slabb'd my Edward;

And the beholders of this tragick play,

Unto me smother'd in their dusky graves.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

2. Mournful; calamitous; sorrowful;
dreadful.

A dire induction I am witness to;

And will to France, hoping the consequence

Will prove as bitter, black, and tragical. Shaksp.

The gaudy, blabbing, and remorseful day
Is crept into the bosom of the sea;
And now loud howling wolves arouse the jades
That drag the tragick melancholy night.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Why look you still so stern and tragical? Shak.
So tragical and merited a fate
Shall swallow those who God and justice hate.

Sandys.

I now must change those notes to tragick. Mit.
The tale of this song is a pretty tragical story;
and pleasing, because it is a copy of nature. Add.

Bid them dress their bloody altars

With every circumstance of tragick pomp. Rowe.

TRAGICALLY. adv. [from tragical.]

1. In a tragical manner; in a manner befitting tragedy.

Juvenal's genius was sharp and eager; and as his provocations were great, he has revenged them tragically. Dryden.

2. Mournfully; sorrowfully; calamitously.

TRAGICALNESS. n. f. [from tragical.]
Mournfulness; calamitousness.

Like bold Phintons, we despise all benefits of the Father of light, unless we may guide his chariot, and we moralize the fable as well in the tragicities of the event, as in the insolence of the undertaking. Dryden's Ptery.

TRAGICOMEDY. n. f. [tragicomedia, Fr. from tragedy and comedy.] A drama compounded of merriment and serious events.

On the world's stage, when our applause grows high,

For acting here life's tragicomedy,

The lookers-on will say we act not well,

Unless the last the former scenes excel. D. N. M.

The fault of that drama are in the kind of it, which is tragicomedy; but it was given to the people. Dryden.

We have often had tragicomedies upon the English theatre with success; but in that sort of composition the tragedy and comedy are in distinct scenes. Gay.

TRAGICOMICAL. adj. [tragicomique, Fr.
tragical and comical.]

1. Relating to tragicomedy.

The whole art of the tragicomical force lies in interweaving the several kinds of the drama, so that they cannot be distinguished.

Gay's M. but I ye call it.

2. Consisting of a mixture of mirth with sorrow.

TRAGICOMICALLY. adv. [from tragicomical.] In a tragicomical manner.

Laws my Pindrick parents matter'd not,

So I was tragicomically got. Branston.

To TRAJECT. v. a. [trajectus, Latin.] To cast through; to throw.

The disputes of those aspiring confident, that think to highly of their attainments, are like the controversy of those in Plato's den, who having never seen but the shadow of an horse trajected, eagerly contended, whether its neighing proceeded from its appearing mane or tail. Glanville's Sceptic.

If there are different kinds of ether, they have a different degree of rarity; by which it becomes to fit a medium for trajecting the light of all cal-lul bodies. Grew's Cynologus.

If the sun's light be trajected through three or more cross prisms successively, those rays which in the first prism are refracted more than others, are in all the following prisms refracted more than others in the same proportion. Newton.

TRAJECT. n. f. [trajet, French; trajectus, Latin.] A ferry; a passage for a water-carriage.

What notes and garments he doth give thee,

Bring to the trajet, to the common ferry,

Which trades to Venice. Shak. Merch. of Venice.

TRAJECTION. n. f. [trajectio, Latin.]

1. The act of darting through.

Later

Later astronomers have observed the free motion of such comets as have, by a trajection through the ether, wandered through the celestial or interstellar part of the universe. Boyle.

Emission.

The trajectories of such an object more sharply pierce the martyred soul of John, than afterwards did the nails the crucifixion body of Peter.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To TRAIL, v. a. [trailler, French.]

1. To hunt by the track.

2. To draw along the ground.

Beat thou the drum, that it speak mournfully;
Trail your steel pikes. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Faintly he stagger'd through the lusting throng,
And hung his head, and trail'd his legs along. Dryden.

3. To draw a long floating or waving body.

What boots the regal circle on his head,
That long behind he trails his pompous robe,
And, of all monarchs, only grasp the globe? Pope.

4. [Treglen, Dutch.] To draw; to drag.

Because they shall not trail me through their streets
Like a wild beast, I am content to go. Milton's Agonistes.

Thrice happy poet, who may trail
Thy house about thee like a snail;
Or, harnessed to a nag, at ease
Take journeys in it like a chaise;
Or in a boat, whenever thou wilt,
Canst make it serve thee for a tilt. Swift.

To TRAIL, v. n. To be drawn out in length.

When his brother saw the red blood trail
Adown to fast, and all his armour steep,
For very felicity he gan to weep. Spenser.
Swift men of foot, whose broad-set backs then trailing hair did hide. Chapman.
Since the flames pursu'd the trailing smoke,
He knew his boon was granted. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

From o'er the roof the blaze began to move,
And trailing vanish'd in th' ideal grove;
It swept a path in heav'n, and shone a guide,
Then in a steaming fench of sulphur dy'd. Dryden's Æneid.

TRAIL, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Scent left on the ground by the animal pursued; track followed by the hunter.

See but the issue of my jealousy: it I cry out thus upon no trail, never trust me when I open again. Shakespeare.

How cheerfully on the false trail they cry
Oh, this is counter, you false Danish dogs. Shak.

I do think, or else this brain of mine
Hunts not the trail of policy so sure
As I have us'd to do, that I have found
The very cause of Hamlet's lunacy. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

2. Any thing drawn to length.

From thence the tumbling trail began to spread,
And lambent glories danc'd about her head. Dryden's Æneid.

When lightning shoots in glistering trails along,
It shines, 'tis true, and gilds the gloomy night;
But when it strikes, 'tis fatal. Rowe's Royal Convent.

3. Any thing drawn behind in long undulations.

And round about her work she did empace
With a fair border wrought of sundry flow'rs,
Enwoven with an ivy winding trail. Spenser's Muirpours.

A sudden star is shot through liquid air,
And drew behind a radiant trail of hair. Pope.

To TRAIN, v. a. [trainer, French.]

1. To draw along.

In hollow cube he train'd
His devilish enginery. Milton.

2. To draw; to entice; to invite; to allure.

If but twelve French
Were there in arms, they would be as a call
To train ten thousand English to their side. Shak.

3. To draw by artifice or stratagem.

For that cause I train'd thee to my house. Shak.
Oh, train me not, sweet mermaid, with thy note!
To drown me in the sister's flood of tears.
Sing, Syren, to thyself, and I will dash;
Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hair,
And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lie. Shak.

4. To draw from act to act by persuasion or promise.

We did train him on,
And his corruption being t'ken from us,
We as the spring of all shall pay for all. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

5. To educate; to bring up: commonly with up.

I can speak English,
For I was train'd up in the English court. Shak.
A most true speaker,
To nature none more bound, his training such,
That he may furnish and instruct great teachers. Shakespeare.

A place for exercise and training up of youth in the fashion of the heathen. 2 Mac. iv. 9.
Call some of young years to train them up in that trade, and so fit them for weighty affairs. Bacon.

Spirits train'd up in feast and song.
The first Christians were by great hardships trained up for glory. Milton.

The young soldier is to be trained on to the warfare of life; wherein care is to be taken that more things be not represented as dangerous than really
